UNQUESTIONED!

Alike in beauty and simplicity of operation, Ohio Electric supremacy is apparent

The beautiful body-design of the Ohio has long made it the car of comparison on every fashionable boulevard.

In this season's models crown fenders, beaten by hand from one piece of aluminum, lend even greater grace to the lines.

And the exclusive Ohio operating combination—magnetic control, magnetic brake and double drive—stands unchallenged as the simplest, safest, most efficient operating mechanism known.

Worm or Helical-gear drive optional. Literature on request.

Protection from Unseen Dangers

Disease most often comes from germs that breed unseen in cellars, bathrooms, sinks, closets and dark corners of the household.

Soap and water do not reach them.

Only a powerful germicide and disinfectant can safely be relied on to protect you.

For twenty years physicians, nurses and housewives who insist on absolute sanitary cleanliness have used

Lysol

The Ideal
Disinfectant
Germicide
and Deodorant

It is five times more powerful and is safer than carbolic acid; better in every way than bichloride of mercury. Don't let dangerous bichloride tablets be brought into the home.

The universal use of Lysol in maternity cases proves its safety and effectiveness. Disease can scarcely enter a home that is guarded by Lysol.

Lysol has a hundred daily uses for household and personal hygiene. As it is always used in diluted form, a small bottle lasts for months.

Sold by Druggists Everywhere

IMPORTANT—Be sure you get Lysol itself. It is put up in round bottles with the signature of Lehn & Fink on the label. Lysol is safe and will safeguard you; the imitations may not.

Has Your Vogue Been Late?

This is an unnecessary question, because your Vogue has been late. But, if you have read our various statements that the Autumn Numbers are being published from four to seven days later than is the case at other seasons, you will not have written to complain about it.

This Winter Fashions Number, which you are now reading, was not in the hands of any reader before Monday, October 12th. Similarly, the next Vogue—the Shopping Number—will not be received by anyone before October 26th. Remember also that in some parts of the country the Post Office sends magazines by freight. This may cause additional delay which Vogue cannot prevent. We are most anxious to learn of any cases of lateness and will do everything possible to remedy them. But please don't write until your copy has had a fair chance to arrive, and when you do write, please give all details clearly.

The next Vogue will be the Autumn SHOPPING Number

Dated Nov. 1st

On sale not before Oct. 26th

All the year round Vogue explores the best shops in your behalf. Once a year it devotes a whole number to the Autumn season's best offerings. In the Autumn Shopping Number we shall make a very careful showing of Autumn clothes and other necessities for the hostess, the debutante, and the housekeeper.

With the whole world of fashion turned topsy turvy by European wars, you will certainly need more than ever before Vogue's authoritative advice in your buying. A morning spent with the Autumn Shopping Number will show you what the best shops are offering. Without hurrying from one place to another you can compare styles, materials, trimmings and prices. Then, when you have decided what to buy, Vogue will, on request, do the purchasing for you. If you subscribe to Vogue, do not expect the Autumn Shopping Number before October 26th at the earliest. If you do not subscribe, tell your newsdealer now to reserve a copy for you.

The next Vogue but one will be the VANITY Number

Dated Nov. 15th

On sale not before Nov. 9th

In this number Vogue will present fashions seen this season on both sides of the footlights in New York. Along with the conservative models produced late this Fall, there will be many gowns worn by the best dressed women of the stage.

Also in the Vanity Number will be an extremely full selection of the latest aids to beauty—creams, lotions, and powders for the dressing table; trinkets for the vanity box; inexpensive bijouterie in pleasing new designs, all the little finishing touches that are to a toilette what the last few strokes are to a portrait.

Stewart & Co.'s new home, the latest addition to the many famous establishments which make upper Fifth Avenue one of the greatest shopping centers in the country.

Stewart & Co.

Invite your inspection of their new home, Monday, October 26th.

The opening of the new store will be the culmination of a daring innovation that is unique in business annals.

The business of Stewart & Co. had grown to such unexpected proportions that it was found impossible to conduct it in their old quarters to advantage.

So, in the very height of a busy season, each day finding the store crowded with shoppers, the doors were closed and the building demolished, to permit the erection of the beautiful edifice you see pictured here.

Five months in the business life of a great firm, lost to them; it surely required confidence of an unusual order in the stability of the reputation they had acquired.

The comforts and convenience of its patrons has been the sole aim in fitting up the new store.

The various floors will be luxuriously fitted up in Circassian Walnut, Mahogany and Maple; they will contain many innovations which will be greatly appreciated by customers.

When it became known in Paris that war was declared, our buyers being on the spot, immediately cabled to New York for a large sum in gold with which they were enabled to purchase many of the choicest models of the foremost Paris Couturiers, just before they closed their establishments.

Many of these ultra fashionable creations have been adapted to conform to the refined elegance which is characteristic of stylish American women, and will be offered at prices that will appeal to the shoppers of moderate means.

Our own clever and ingenious designers have also caught the spirit of the occasion, and have eclipsed all former efforts in the production of exquisite original models.

To Answer These Messages

1. Put your reply in an unsealed envelope with the number of the message to which you are replying in the corner. (For instance, No. 350-A.) Then fold this envelope, enclose it in another envelope and mail it to Vogue, 443 Fourth Avenue, New York
2. Send no money in your first reply—wait till the other woman writes to you.
3. If her letter is satisfactory, then send Vogue your money order or certified cheque for the sum agreed upon. We will have the article sent to you, and will keep your money on deposit till you instruct us to send it to the other woman.
4. Never send any article to Vogue. The advertiser pays expressage on articles sent for inspection—the one inspecting pays return expressage in case the article does not suit.

To Insert Your Message

When you wish to sell something which you do not need—or to buy something which you do need—send your message to Sales and Exchanges. The price is $2 for 25 words, or less. Additional words, 10 cents each. Cheque or money order must accompany message; be sure to write your name and address very plainly. Your message for the December 1st Vogue should be received on or before October 25th.

A $450 CHEQUE FROM A 25 WORD MESSAGE

THAT this page offers a remarkable opportunity to the woman who has something to sell is known all over America. A woman in Knoxville, Tenn., recently published a little 25-word message which brought her a cheque for $450.

The most expensive article in Sales and Exchanges this month is an antique sideboard for $1,500. The least expensive are some Victor records offered at half price.

Between these extremes are many things of unusual interest—part of the coronation vestments of the Archbishop of Canterbury, many gowns, shawls, and suits, some excellent furs, and much furniture and jewelry at very moderate prices.

No dealers may advertise here. But if you have something of real merit to sell privately, try a little message of your own on this unique page of Vogue.

How This Car Compares with the Average of 39 of the Leading European Models!

39 European Models Average Wheel-Base 112.2 Inches
—Average Cylinder Capacity 2324 c. c.

Peerless 4-Cylinder Model Wheel-Base 113 Inches
—Cylinder Capacity 3615 c. c.

Wheel-Base Almost Identical but 56% More Power

(The Wheel-Base of the 6-Cylinder Model)
(is only 8 Inches Greater than the 4-Cylinder)

Formerly in Europe, as in America, automobiles were used mostly for touring. Today in Europe, and in America, for one day of touring, over twenty days of utility work is done by the average automobile.

Europeans no longer buy heavy, long wheel-base cars. They buy a new "all-purpose" design that turns entirely around without backing in city streets and can be run for less than half of the tire and fuel expense of the old touring type—yet equally comfortable for touring.

For the Peerless Spring Suspension combined with location of rear seat produces riding ease equal to the long wheel-base cars. Yet the gain in economy, running and tire cost, and ease of control, is almost unbelievable!

Think of an automobile running over 300 miles without refilling its ordinary-size gasoline tank! Yet this is what the Europeans now demand of this type of car!

Think of a high grade, spacious, durable car that complete, ready-to-run, weighs less than 3,000 pounds! Judge what the tire saving must be!

Think of a car that is easiest riding for touring, yet can twist and turn in a city street, where to use an old-style, long wheel-base car would be impractical if not dangerous!

The Model That is Displacing All Others in Europe!

39 of the Leading European Cars!

The Situation in Europe!

In Europe an over-powered car is now avoided by experienced buyers. Europeans know it uses unnecessary fuel, creates tire expense. Such heavy cars must necessarily have a long wheel-base.

When a way was discovered of producing equal ease of riding on a shorter wheel-base all Europe turned to the short wheel-base car. Note these specifications of 39 of the leading European makes

For the saving in weight, tire and fuel expense—to say nothing of the greater ease and comfort in operation—is remarkable. Note how in Europe this model is now displacing all others.

Note These Unusual Features in This New "All-Purpose" Car!

The New European Wheel-Base, enabling a complete turn (without backing) to be made in the average city street, yet with complete ease of riding.

Remarkable System of Spring Suspension on Chassis produces an ease of riding heretofore found only in the longest and heaviest cars made.

$5,000 Equipment!—such as tire pumps, mohair top with cover, two-unit lighting and starting system, ammeter, dash light, speedometer, rear gasoline tank and tires, one-man top, divided front seats, full-carpeted floor, all regular Peerless quality.

Style and Beauty Only Obtainable in Aluminum Bodies—as used in the Peerless "48-Six" and all other makes of $5,000 cars. The first car of its price in which this material is used.

Spiral Bevel Rear Axle Gear—the same as used heretofore only in the highest priced cars sold in America, identical in design with the 1915 Peerless "48-Six."

Divided Front Seats—with full-carpeted floor from dash to rear seat, improving ventilation of front compartment, gives more room for driver's right arm, promotes sociability and convenience.

Extra Large Wide-Opening Doors—Three-Abreast Rear Seat—and many other comfort features found heretofore only in $5,000 cars—Actually duplicating in comfort the Peerless "48-Six."

This Peerless "All-Purpose" Car is designed to interest experienced buyers familiar with and desiring all the improvements and comforts of a $5,000 car for $2,000. It is not a $1,400 car built to supplant a $1,600 car.

Detroit Electric

Announcing 1915 Models

Six splendid new body designs, mounted on a chassis of demonstrated mechanical perfection—simplified, refined and improved, yet not embodying radical changes in principle—make up the Detroit Electric line for 1915. It includes broughams of varying passenger capacity, with front, rear or duplex drive, also a cabriolet.

A Car for Men and Women

The electric car is no longer merely a woman's car. The performances of the Detroit Electric in mileage and speed have dispelled this old delusion.

True the electric has many qualities which make it the preferable car for women, but these features have proven to be the same desirable qualities which men are seeking in other types of automobiles but cannot get, except in an electric, namely: dependableness, freedom from mechanical annoyances, ease of operation, quietness, cleanliness, and most of all, low cost of operation, maintenance and depreciation.

If You Use Only One Car in the Family Buy a Detroit Electric

98% of all automobile trips, statistics prove, do not exceed a total of sixty-miles at an average speed of twenty to twenty-five miles an hour, which means that 98% of all trips are within easy radius of the Detroit Electric. Don't pay a premium on an entire year's driving for a service required only 2% of the time.

Men Who Have Learned the Utility of the Detroit Electric Never Give it Up

To the man or woman hesitating between another type of car and the Detroit Electric this fact is significant: we do not know of a single instance where a man who has given the Detroit Electric a thorough trial and has learned from actual experience the great utility of this car has ever gone back to any other type of car for his ordinary needs.

Detroit Electric is the Choice of One-Third of All Electric Automobile Buyers

It is a fact that to be a successful manufacturer of high grade automobiles requires a certain annual volume to permit the expense of making patterns, tools and jigs, by which method only can they manufacture strong drop forgings, and attain the accuracy and perfect interchangeability of parts which insure working harmony throughout the car.

The Anderson Electric Car Company builds one-third of all the electric pleasure cars made today. It has met and crossed that dividing line in volume which separates strong drop forgings from heavy cheap castings, perfect accuracy from near-accuracy, first quality from second quality.

Our 1915 Models are now in the hands of our dealers everywhere. See them today.

A Woman of Charm

CHARM is a genius for being effective, whether in appearance, in manner, or in deed. To a woman of charm no situation is really difficult and no detail unimportant.

For much the same reason the new Jeffery Chesterfield Six, waiting at the door, has a significant charm. Its appearance is effective. It embodies that height of style brought out by a certain smoothness of line, as if the design were naturally perfect from the beginning and not an evident effort to be fashionable.

There is no sense of effort about a Jeffery Chesterfield. It instinctively does the right thing in the right way; it looks the thoroughbred it is.

Many Jeffery Chesterfields are upholstered, not in leather, but in whipcord of the owner's favorite shade.

You could have one that way too.

HOW WILL YOU KEEP UP APPEARANCES

THIS WINTER?

No. 2772/20. A feature of the moment is the one-piece dress. This new pattern is priced at $1.

WILL you by using Vogue Patterns judiciously, add to your wardrobe whenever necessary—perhaps to-day—those, two, or three, or half a dozen, garments that will make it absolutely adequate and satisfactory?

Vogue Patterns are the bridge that spans the gulf between a limited and unlimited dress allowance. They enable the woman who has a clever little seamstress—one who can follow simple instructions—to produce at moderate cost gowns, suits, negligees and lingerie of real distinction.

True, Vogue Patterns cost more than other kinds; yet their use is not an extravagance but a real economy.

A Few "Woman's Reasons"

Because, instead of representing the obvious designs made by the million and for the million, Vogue Patterns are selected from among the smartest advanced models from the greatest designers.

Because, instead of being machine made, Vogue's Patterns are hand made, which insures accuracy of cut—and the cut is a smart cut.

Because, instead of a bewildering lot of tissue pieces stamped with incomprehensible hieroglyphics, Vogue Patterns are marked in plain English which shows at a glance how to put them together.

Because since they are not designed by the hundred thousand, they have that most desirable of all qualities—exclusiveness.

No. 2681/20—2682/20. A smart afternoon frock in the new mode. Waist and skirt, 50 cents each.

TURN TO PAGES 73 TO 82

IF you have always used dress patterns, you will realize at a glance that the Vogue Patterns on these pages are of a distinction not even approached by other makers. Nor is it only their fashion value that will appeal to you. Though smart in cut, Vogue Patterns are easy to execute. Every seam is hand marked by a perforated line; there is no distressing puzzle over matching queerly shaped marks.

If, on the other hand, you have never used patterns, in the fear that your dress may even hint at being "home-made," you will find that the smart gown, the unusual negligee, the exclusive lingerie, can all be achieved with a Vogue Pattern.

A Letter Worth Reading

Langhorne, Pa.
Dear Vogue:
Last winter I had a perfectly stunning suit, the cost of which makes me smile. This is a strict account of it:

Vogue Pattern	$1.00
Black material 4 yds., 54 in. wide at $2 a yd.	8.00
Lining, bargain remnant of flowered silk	1.18
Old gold moire for vest 1 yd., at $1.50 per yd.	1.50
Black moire ribbon for sash, 1 yd. at $.85 per yd.	.85
Real wolf fur, for collars and cuffs	12.00
Findings	.50
	$25.03

I took the suit to a furrier's to have the collar and cuffs measured, and one of the fitters asked me where I had bought it. He refused to believe that I had made it myself.
Sincerely yours,
Miss _____.

THIS letter is typical of the experience of hundreds of women, who when they want to make their dress allowances go a little further, or who when they need a dress for some special occasion, turn to Vogue Patterns.

When, from page 73 to 82 of this Vogue, you have selected the patterns that please you, this order blank will save the trouble of writing a letter.

Phipps Hats

WAR has played havoc with hat-makers unaccustomed to creation, but the Phipps organization with its years-long habit of origination proceeds quite as if Paris had moved to New York.

Phipps' designers delve into the same sources of inspiration as did the French, and the happy results are plainly to be viewed at the shops that sell Phipps Hats.

Will Small Waists Come Back?

Is There a New Figure?

These two very important questions are asked us daily by women in all parts of the world, by letter, and by personal questions, put to our world wide organization.

Read our answer carefully and pass it on to your friends.

Small waists—the wasp kind—are unnatural, and decidedly unhealthful. There is almost a jar on one's "artistic nerves" when the old fashioned figure types are viewed in the magazines of 5 to 20 years ago.

Millions and millions of women have adopted the natural waist line.

It is beautiful. It helps the appearance of the hip lines by making them look smaller. It will take years of work—yes, work—to cultivate a small waist, and when it is finally secured, you may not enjoy it. We hope the extremely small waist will not again attain a vogue.

Is There a New Figure?

Yes, but it is only a step nearer a perfect figure. This season a closer fitting bodice is being worn. The bust of the heavy or mature figure needs support to harmonize with the lines of the bodice. As a result the newer Gossard models are slightly higher and a curve is seen under the bust at front.

Is that all? Yes.

A Model for Full Figures

This is a long straight corset with closely fitted skirt curving to the outline of the figure. Three elastic sections make this possible without uncomfortable restraint. The bust has elastic section, insuring perfect freedom and comfort for the figure having full diaphragm. Made of a diagonal stripe mercerized broche, soft close fitting material of splendid wearing service.

Price $8.50

345 Orders

Mme. Rose's Experience this Fall in Vogue

MME. OLIVE FREMSTAD, prima donna at the Metropolitan, has just bought five gowns from an advertiser in the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide.

A Vogue reader from Dallas, Texas, came into this advertiser's shop the other day, and gave her two dresses to remodel. So successfully was this done that the woman from Dallas has followed it up with orders amounting to $600.

From Arizona came a gown to be entirely made over—and when it was done, three more were received. Each order seems to lead to an endless chain of new ones.

The advertiser who does these wonderful things is Mme. Rose—a clever Frenchwoman whose shop is at 49 West 37th St., and whose advertisement you will find on page 25. Here is a letter from Mme. Rose; with that modesty characteristic of all sincere talent—from painting to dressmaking—she lays the emphasis on Vogue's success in bringing her orders rather than on her own ability in filling them:

"During the past season I venture to say that I have received no less than 345 orders through Vogue. This has been the means of my having the busiest season in all my thirty years in business—and I owe it all to Vogue."

Mme. Rose

A visit to any of the advertisers on these pages is always appreciated; and you will find that all of them are particularly anxious to satisfy the Vogue reader. But that is another story.

When you lose the address of a favorite shop

A reader in Oregon writes: "Just a few weeks ago I found in the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide the lost address of a little perfume shop."

This reminds us of one of the uses of this guide to unusual shops. It is not only a place in which you can find new shops—hundreds of them—but also a place where at any minute you may find the lost address of a favorite old shop. Like the Social Register, it is an invaluable directory of addresses new and old—use it in the same way, both to look up new addresses and to verify old ones.

A Glance Forward

YOU have noticed of course how most of these little shops change their messages in changing seasons. Most of them have now begun to reflect the fashions, the amusements, and the activities of the late Autumn; very soon they will have many excellent things to offer the Christmas shopper.

Year after year, the Consumers' League and similar associations urge you to do your Christmas shopping early. Sometimes with ironic intent but usually with sincerity, the newspapers publish the same admonition. Little by little this campaign has had its effect, until now there are hundreds of women who do all their Christmas buying in November, and thereby secure the best offerings of the shops and also perform an incalculable service to the sales people and delivery men.

Even in this issue of the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide you will find many things appropriate for gifts; as hinted above, these suggestions will be multiplied tenfold in the numbers that will follow.

Begin to look now for gifts and helpful necessities of all kinds—but do not be satisfied with merely looking. Write!

AUTUMN SHOPPING NUMBER

Dated November 1

OCTOBER 15, 1914

VOL. 44. NO. 8
WHOLE NO. 1009

LATE in August, at the very beginning of the war abroad, we invited you to rely upon Vogue for authentic news of the Paris fashions. And, in every issue since that time, Vogue has presented models from the Paris makers. Some of these came from the last openings before the war; others from Deauville and the other watering places at which the gay social seasons were ended with such almost unbelievable suddenness.

Now, when there is small prospect of new Paris styles for the midseason, a number of New York's smart dressmakers have realized that the creation of new models must for the present fall upon them. Simultaneously, women of New York society awoke to the need of helping the metropolitan dressmakers toward this end. As a result of the two movements, a great Fashion Fête will be held next month at the Ritz-Carlton under the auspices of Vogue.

The Fête will be conducted as a novel and charming entertainment. A brief announcement of the Fête appears on page 138 with a list of the patronesses who up to September 25th had given their support to the undertaking. This list is necessarily incomplete; other names have since been added.

MODELS WILL BE SHOWN ON MANIKINS

Models will be entered subject to the approval of a jury selected by the patronesses. The various groups, including tailored suits, afternoon and dinner gowns, wraps, hats and negligees, will be posed on manikins.

Proceeds from the Fashion Fête, derived from the sale of tickets at $3 and from other sources, will be given to the Committee of Mercy organized for the relief of women and children left destitute by the war.

The exhibitors will include the smartest dressmakers in New York, and the exclusive milliners. The success of the Fête from a fashion standpoint depends on their creative ability. Its success as a singularly brilliant and unusual social occasion is already assured by the enthusiasm and energy of the women of society who are carrying the idea forward with so much zest.

Tickets will be available from the office of Vogue at 443 Fourth Avenue, New York. They may be had for the evening exhibitions of November 4th, 5th, and 6th; and for the matinees of the 5th and 6th.

An entertaining program of divertissements, apart from the display of the fashions themselves, will be arranged for each day. The management of the Ritz-Carlton has contributed the ballroom; and the music will be provided by several of the best orchestras in New York.

YOU have been asking yourself what effect the European war would have upon the shops. Now that the sources of importation have either been cut off or greatly reduced, women everywhere have waited with intense interest to see what the American shops would offer this autumn. The next Vogue will show definitely what they are offering.

The cover of the next (November 1) Vogue is by G. W. Plank

In this Autumn Shopping Number you will compare what the smart shops are now offering with what they offered in less troubled times. And, if your judgment coincides with ours, you will be astonished to see how the dressmakers, the large stores, and the specialty shops of America have risen to their present opportunity. The shops that Vogue knows—the best shops in New York and other cities—are showing even better articles than usual this month.

Among the prominent features of the Autumn Shopping Number you will find:

Fashions for all occasions, including mourning. It is now possible to buy, even at shortest notice, mourning that is absolutely correct. Some excellent examples from the New York shops will be illustrated in the Autumn Shopping Number.

Lingerie of real distinction will find a place as will china and glass from the exclusive New York shops, and house decorations, many of them from oriental importers. These eastern ornaments, properly handled, make attractive additions to an American room.

Also in the next Vogue will be an important early selection of Christmas gifts, mostly of the sort that have to be ordered well in advance; for instance, marked silverware and engraved stationery. These are the first of many hundred gift suggestions that Vogue will present to you between now and the middle of December in four successive issues.

PRINCESS FRANCIS VON HATZFELDT-WILDENBOURG

Princess Francis von Hatzfeldt-Wildenbourg has always endeared herself by her many philanthropies. She is one of the many American women who have already come forward as active members of the American Women's War Relief Fund in London. Before her marriage the princess was Miss Clara Huntington, daughter of the late Collis P. Huntington, and by her marriage to the prince she took precedence of most of the American women who have married into the nobility of Europe

FASHION ISSUES A CALL TO ARMS

EACH train that leaves Paris now for the coast carries hundreds of Americans who object to being called refugees but who are fleeing Paris, just the same. The few American women who are actively engaged in Red Cross work remain and are caring for the wounded soldiers they have taken into their homes; but for the tourist there is little that is attractive now in Paris. Museums are closed and treasures stored away; everywhere sheep and cattle are pasturing in the parks; Magic City has been appropriated by the government for the manufacture of boots for the soldiers; and the Cirque d'Hiver is now a refuge for the Belgians. Seaside resorts are either deserted or turned into vast hospitals for the wounded of the allied forces, and, although it is only a few weeks since the German Emperor threw his legions across the Belgian border, people are already talking wistfully of "before the war."

WITHIN EARSHOT OF THE ENEMY

These have been sad weeks in the French capital. There were days when Parisians went about in silence, their ears strained to catch the sound of not too distant artillery, and even now the Red Cross hospitals are being filled with wounded French and German soldiers, wreckage thrown up by the now happily receding tide of war. In the parks and gardens the children are playing much as usual, but it is pathetic to see them playing at war,—digging tiny trenches, demolishing tiny forts with well-aimed pebbles, and heroically leading small armies of gallant twigs to victory. The French flag is always victorious in these miniature conflicts, and the number of German prisoners enormous. Occasionally some happy child appears in the gardens with a whole box of small tin soldiers in French and German uniforms, and then the battle begins in deeper earnest under the thinning chestnut trees and wages all afternoon with fearful slaughter. And when a bomb in the form of a brown and shrivelled leaf drops into the camp—what consternation! All the children know what bombs are, and so, alas, does the bonne, who sits quietly near the scene of carnage with an eye always on the lookout for the dreaded aeroplanes of Allemagne.

But though these mimic battles are waged all day in the gardens, and all day the sterner struggles on the frontier continue, a few couturiers still create fashions, and it is right that they should. If any business can flourish, if only in a small way, in these unhappy times, by all means let it flourish.

Under the circumstances, the truly military effect of a recent creation of black broadcloth—black, alas—and black fur, is not surprising. As shown in the sketch on this page, the jacket is braided up the front in military fashion, and is bordered with fur at the bottom in a way which accentuates the flare. The moderately wide skirt is also edged with fur, and is short enough to show the ankles. This frock is remarkably interesting in that it indicates what one may expect in the way of future creations by the Paris dress-makers. The small hat, black also, is an exact copy of the bonnet de police worn by French soldiers in fatigue regalia; the only feminine thing about it is the cockade of black ribbon, and even that has martial significance.

Paris Calls the Roll of Her Reserves; Suits Appear in Buckles and much Braid, and Hats in Cockades and Tommy Atkins Crowns; but Evening Gowns and Wraps Plead Exemption from Military Duty

In the suit shown on page 32, Callot is exploiting a new color called beurre. It is neither putty color nor cream, but is something between the two, with just a glint of salmon; one might call it buff and not go far astray. The model sketched is made of panne velvet in this shade, and bordered all about with marten. The swing of the circular coat and skirt is easy and graceful.

Of black velvet bordered with raccoon is the coat of the suit sketched on page 33. It flares modishly at the hips, is quite flat in the back and front, and is belted across the front only, where it is fastened with a jet buckle. Following the new fashion, the skirt is shorter on the sides than in the front and back.

FIRST PLACE TO VELVET COATS

Quite the smartest outer garment now, smarter even than the fur cloak, is the separate coat of velvet bordered with fur, designed to wear with the one-piece frocks. Callot's separate coats are unsurpassed by anything seen in Paris this season. Of soft and vivid velvets, they are worn over frocks of sober-hued satin and cloth, and the more they flare the smarter they are declared to be. The Chéruit coat differs from the Callot creation in that, instead of flaring all about the figure, it flares only at the hips, being quite flat in front and back.

Mauve brocade velvet and silver fox are used for the evening cloak sketched at the upper left on page 33. The short shoulder cape is of sealskin. Like so many other recent models this cloak has no fastening of any kind but must be drawn about the figure and held with the hand—a subtlety worthy of the house of Callot.

Drécoll shows a redingote which is rather long and straight in effect, although it is quite wide at the hem. Premet's favorite coat is short in front, scarcely covers the waist-line, and extends to the hem of the skirt in the back. It is worn over a flaring, circular or ruffled skirt, short enough to show the curve of the ankle. Premet shows also a number of simple tailored coats, rather long-waisted, with a slightly circular piece sewn on to give a flare. These are worn over moderately wide circular skirts. These coats have long sleeves and fur collars.

A brave front indeed, the couturiers put upon fashion, and the hand of mail will doubtless leave its impress on suits and hats alike for many a day

Her whilom caprices forgotten, the Parisienne affects a plain, buff-colored Callot suit with only marten, itself, and its circular swing, for trimming

The glow of sapphires is held in the velvet flounces, and the thread of cut trimming at the top of this Weeks frock scintillates like sparks of sapphire fire

Not fitted, but adjusted to the figure, is this Callot frock which taking, perhaps, the basque as its model, softens into the vague lines of the "moyen âge"

It is, perhaps, due to the interrupted season that so few fur coats were shown at the openings. Chéruit topped a simple frock of velours de laine, flounced with moleskin, with a short coat of the same fur, Callot showed one short straight fur coat in her collection, and there were one or two more, but the fur-trimmed coat seems to be the favorite instead of the fur coat.

NUMBERING THE DAYS OF MUFFS AND BOAS

As the coats are nearly all collared with fur, it is plain that the fur boa is to be no longer smart. Muffs were conspicuously absent from the openings, but, though muffs are not much needed with the long fur-edged sleeves of the moment, they will be carried without doubt in cold weather. Some new muffs, rather smaller than those of last year, are made of draped and plaited velvet with merely a touch of fur or a single gleaming jewel to lend them distinction. One would suppose that a simple muff of folded velvet would be inexpensive, but instead most astonishing prices are asked for these pretty trifles. A muff, it appears, is a muff, whether of fur or velvet, and the price is practically the same. Of the few fur muffs seen the prettiest is one of ermine fringed with monkey fur. Another attractive one is fashioned of monkey fur and moleskin.

THE ALARMING PREVALENCE OF BLACK

Furs are being dyed black in Paris now, and bolt after bolt of colored cloth has been given an inky bath. Dull-finished black cloth and serge, and black châmeuse crêpe have an alarming place in the season's offerings. Makers of children's clothes are putting away colors with a sigh, and are fashioning tiny hats and frocks of dull black stuffs for the many French children who are just beginning to know that they are fatherless. But even in making these sorrowful little garments, the fingers of the Parisian do not forget their cunning, and small roses and absurd little bows and loops of sable chiffon and silk made with more than usual care, decorate the small frocks and garments of the little ones of France.

Men from the ranks, we hear, are to be sent back to the shops and looms, and once the great factories at Lyons are moving again, there will be no lack of cloth. It is indeed a pity that the wheels stopped whirring, even for a moment, for never did a season open more auspiciously for fabrics. Soft and lovely as the silks, woolens, and velvets were last year, they are softer and more lovely this—which is saying much. The new dull-finished cloths and gabardines so very well adapted for the one-piece frocks featured this season by all the great houses of Paris, are so soft in texture that they may be plaited and shirred with no appearance of clumsiness. Chéruit, Callot, Premet, and Drécoll all sponsor the one-piece frock; yet there is no monotony in the models displayed, for the dresses, while alike in the essentials, are as varied in detail as they are charming.

THE REGIME OF THE ONE-PIECE FROCK

The one-piece frock is, as a rule, long-sleeved and comparatively high-necked, and is belted, if at all, in the most casual way. Chéruit uses a rather narrow belt, often folded, which sags on one side or in the back. Premet laces a broad striped ribbon through slits in a straight, long-waisted, one-piece frock, while Callot either belts a frock with fur or dispenses with the belt altogether. The fur belt, varying in width, is favored by the couturiers and is much in evidence. Attempts at the princess dress were remarked

The pampered protégé of the openings, the one-piece frock, here demanded of Callot a sumptuous, swathing wrap, velvet brocaded and fur edged—and promptly got it at the different houses, although they were not tightly fitted at the waist. The basque, launched so successfully last season by Premet, had an enormous vogue throughout the spring and summer, but at the mid-August openings, instead of developing into the tight, boned basque, as might have been expected, it drifted off into the vague lines of the moyen âge style, so we are apparently as far as ever from styles Victorian—that is, generally speaking. However, Premet showed a few coats closely fitted to the waist, and Chéruit had one or two also.

THE LINE OF THE "MOYEN ÂGE" GOWN

Three circular flounces of sapphire velvet—the lower one escaping the ground by quite six inches—form the skirt of the Weeks evening gown shown in the middle at the top of the opposite page. A girdle of brocaded sapphire

Neither too high nor too low the collar, practical the material, reasonably wide the skirt; unable to be restrained another minute, Paris lifts the hem high up on both sides

"Collar aplenty for warmth and an astonishing amount for charm; material sufficient for warmth and a prodigal amount for fashion," says Redfern

"Not satisfied with a hem eight inches high she must needs tuck her skirt up too," quoth Mrs. Grundy. "Oh," replied Miss Parisienne, "but see how high my bodice is."

ribbon, shot with silver and strewn with clusters of blush roses, is drawn about the hips. One thickness of sapphire chiffon veils the under-blouse of velvet, and a band of cut sapphire trimming borders the neck and edges the sleeves. The upper edge of the girdle is outlined with a two-inch band of brilliants, and a deeply scalloped fringe of sapphires followed by a similar fringe of pearls partially conceals the upper part of the girdle.

HAIL TO FLOUNCES AND POCKETS

The wide skirt is unquestionably the new thing, and yet many of the new models have narrow skirts topped by the familiar tunic. Callot, especially, shows models of this kind. One noticed, at the openings, the absence of anything resembling a bustle; the sole exception was a bustle-like puff of black tulle on a Premet evening gown.

Flounced skirts are seen everywhere, but it was at Premet's that I encountered the ruffle. In addition to ruffles Premet seems to have a perfect passion for pockets, and places them wherever pockets can be placed; even a white chiffon waistcoat is adorned with them. In an

Not to be outdone by the skirt, the hat adopts a circular flounce, calls it a brim, attaches it to a low crown, and allows it to ripple in becoming nonchalance over the hair. This model by Evelyne Varon is of dark velvet and is trimmed with an aspiring bow of blue moire ribbon which describes three-sharp angles about the hat, imparting a most dashing air

The sketch on the right below shows a charmingly sedate Suzanne Talbot hat of mahogany velvet, which permits itself so slight a flare as to suggest, rather than constitute, a turban. A succession of chrysanthemums of brown velvet and white taffeta, which follow the line of the upturned brim, is the only trimming permitted this model

SMALL A HAT MAY BE, LARGE

A HAT MAY BE, BUT ABUNDANCE

OF TRIMMING IT MAY NOT HAVE

Madeline selects black satin for a hat which leans to cubism and boasts four corners and many angles, and she counteracts the abundance of straight lines by a round ball of a pompom high on the brim at the back. Hats illustrated from Lazarus

A Lewis hat which sets the pace for scarf and muff is of amethyst velvet and has a small puffed crown outlined by a plaiting of velvet, caught with rosette of ribbon, in the centre of which is a cabochon amethyst

STILL OUTDISTANCE OTHER ENTRIES

Mindful of the precept of true charity, the sealskin wrap above keeps the left hand in ignorance of the doings of the right, confining the left within its cape folds, and allowing the right to emerge in freedom through a kimono sleeve. The collar is of skunk. Brown and white guinea hen feathers trim the small Virot and Berthe turban of "tête de nègre" velvet.

Of German fitch is a set of furs which offsets a small scarf by a muff of generous proportions and unusual shape, rounded like a melon and fluted as a melon is. In pleasing combination with the yellow brown of the fitch is the golden brown of a Reboux hat of silk fringe with a soft velvet bow at the top. Furs from H. Jaekel & Sons; hats from Ogilvie.

ACCEPTED RULINGS TOUCH-
ERS OF WINTER RAIMENT

A Drécoll model in baby lamb and skunk has a semi-fitting upper section to which is attached a circular flounce which hangs in pleasing ripples of folds. Smartly French is the Maria Guy hat of Burgundy red velvet, faced with velvet of corbeau blue. The two wide-spread wings form a cap-like crown and extend their tips beyond the brim of the hat.

Monkey fur, adopted by the gossams of summer, is prominent among the winter furs. In the set at the left it is combined with satin of corbeau blue which makes part of the neck-piece and lines the muff. The Virot hat is of dark blue velvet trimmed with blue grosgrain ribbon, which forms a plaiting on the right where the hat brim is doubled over on itself.

No autumn season would do its duty by the mode if it failed to bring out a suit on such lines as this to fill the needs of rough and ready country wear. The plain coat hangs in soft fulness from a shoulder yoke in both front and back, and is held in slightly by a belt which is of patent leather in the front and of cloth in the back. The skirt buttons down each side, and may be unfastened to give greater freedom for walking. The brown velvet hat with odd pointed brim has a crown of brown and gold striped silk trimmed with velvet dots, appliqué

On a gown which is otherwise most unadorned, Bulloz makes a highly decorative feature of a girdle of blue gabardine richly braided in gold, and finished with a band of gabardine ornamented with buttons. The waist and the long overskirt are of corbeau blue taffeta, and the underskirt is of blue gabardine of the same color. A tiny cording of blue gabardine heads the sleeves, finishes the bottom of the overskirt, and outlines the V. The coat which accompanies it is of the blue gabardine with collar of kolinsky. Brim of blue velvet and crown of blue taffeta, with a single ostrich feather, form the hat

Premet sponsors a brown cloth suit which is all narrowness above the waist and all width below it. Close fitting sleeves are set into the snug body-section of the coat, but the skirt section, very short in front and very long in back, knows nothing of snugness and flares in many ripples. Embroidery in blue on front, back, and sleeves is the only trimming of the coat. The skirt, trimmed with embroidery and folds of the cloth, abets the flaring tendency of the coat by its own generous width. Natural colored raccoon finishes the neck of the coat and forms the small turban. Costumes from Carroll

COSTUMES MAY BE PLAIN OR ELABORATE, AS MAY BE-

FIT THEIR PURPOSE, BUT IT IS NOT BY EXCEPTION

THAT THEY PROVE THE RULE OF UNIVERSAL SHORTNESS

TWO INFLUENCES — THAT OF THE CAPE AND THAT OF THE FLARING SKIRT HAVE UNITED TO RELEASE THE EVENING COAT FROM ITS SWATHING DRAPERIES AND TO INDUCE IT TO FALL IN FLOWING FOLDS

A wrap of baby lamb which is neither a cape nor a coat but a happy combination of the two has, because of its dual nature, an advantage over both coat and cape. When the winds of winter blow coldest the loose ends of the circular back may be drawn about the figure and buttoned in front, giving double warmth. The collar, the cuffs, and the facing up the front all are of kolinsky

A great piece of corbeau blue velvet is this, slashed on one side and with the two ends drawn together and held in place by blue silk cords with tasseled ends. In front, one odd revers falls back from the triangular neck opening, and in the back is a collar of monkey fur to match the straggly bands which outline the bottom. Models from Bergdorf & Goodman Co.

"To every wrap its own muff," says a Russian coat of sphinx velvet with great cuffs of skunk that form a muff when the hands are together. The fur collar is drawn close about the throat under a band of silver galloon, and bands of silver galloon are all the restraint, and that but slight, imposed upon the lines of the coat to deter it from flowing out into a cape

A DRESS, A SUIT, AND A SEPARATE COAT WITH BUT A SINGLE THOUGHT AS TO

WHERE THE FLARE SHOULD BE—HATS WITH MINDS THAT RUN IN THE SAME CHANNEL

Nothing daunted by its apparent handicap, a tiny little violet velvet toque makes wonderful progress toward equaling the skirt of the coat it is with in width. Purple suede cloth is the material of the suit, which, though Russian in line, lives up to the latest Parisian edict in extremely wide bands of fur. Gray fox is the fur, and the revers and wide girdle are of purple velvet.

Without a doubt, the influence of the many semiprincess models shown at the openings has been a factor in the fashioning of this frock, for even though it has a sash of black satin the curving, princess line is unbroken. Black velvet forms the overskirt and the bodice, collared once with black satin and once with white tulle; the underskirt of black satin is gathered a little bit around the waist and ruffled a great deal below it. One slim, quill-like strip of velvet trims the small, close fitting, black velvet toque. Models from Farquharson & Wheelock

So broadly banded with kolinsky, it stands out at the bottom like the petal of a giant calla-lily is the circular skirt of this sealskin coat, collared prodigiously high. Below it falls a narrow skirt of black zibeline and a narrower underskirt of sealskin, and above it is a snug little sealskin toque with two "tête de nègre" ostrich feathers fluffing up high at one side.

Six inches off the floor and plaited to unhampering fullness is this street suit of jade green broadcloth. A wide, straight double box plait extends down the middle of the front of the skirt and clusters of plaits add width to the back in both skirt and coat. The very long coat is cut away in front and is trimmed with oblong jade buttons in front and back. High collar and straight cuffs of leopard skin afford striking contrast to the soft green of the broadcloth.

"All things to all women" is the device of a garment which is coat, cape, and muff in one. The cape-like circular body is of Persian lamb, as are the long ends which cross in front, in the surplice fashion favored by the mode, and fastens low on the hips in back. A wide band of zibeline fur edges the cape section, the edges of which turn in to form sleeves which become a muff when the hands are held together. The lining is of satin in a striking design in black and old-gold plaid.

A velvet street suit enlivens its sober green color by an unusual trimming of Van Dyck points, embroidered in silver and jet. In front, the skirt is shirred to a flat yoke about eight inches deep, and a wide panel without fulness forms the back. The long loose coat flares agreeably, in a fashion neither too conservative nor extravagant. The wide belt, placed well below the waist-line, fastens with a fancy buckle of jet, which holds a sash-end of velvet. Collar and cuffs are martens.

DEPRIVED OF THE SLENDER SILHOUETTE THAT MADE EVERY WOMAN YOUNG, FROM HER NECK TO HER HEELS AT LEAST, AND FORCED TO WEAR A FULL SKIRT, EVERY FOLD OF WHICH ADDS INCHES TO HER BULK AND YEARS TO HER AGE, WOMAN CUNNINGLY CONTRIVES TO DEFEAT AN INCONSIDERATE MODE BY CUTTING THE FULL SKIRT SO SHORT THAT SHE APPEARS MORE GIRLISH THAN EVER

A short-waisted Premet bodice of crystal lattice-work on pink satin with two heavy-headed roses half inclined to clamber up it, and wide bands of pink taffeta where the sleeves would be if there were any. The tulle tunic, which but for the effective bands of pale pink taffeta ribbon would be scarcely more than a rosy shadow, falls over an underskirt of pink panne velvet

A velvet waistcoat (though appearing where a bodice is wont to appear), a velvet waistcoat is, and it is nothing more. But what's the odds, when it is of exquisitely colored old-blue velvet and tops a skirt of white satin fringed with white fur, and is so short it must needs drop over itself an overskirt of old-blue tulle so long that the velvet-bound scallops reach to the ankles—almost

All unprepared for it by a skirt of pink satin and two wisps of white tulle which compose the bodice, the eye is startled and pleased by a cape of black tulle, weighted with a glistening fringe of jet and caught under full-blown roses, which floats into view when the wearer turns her back. The skirt is not a jot shorter nor a tittle longer than the fashion law allows, but it is ample in width

FLOWING DRAPERIES, ABSENCE OF SLEEVES, AND AN INHERENT SIM-

PLICITY AND FREEDOM POINT TO GREEK SCULPTURE AS THE INSPIRATION

OF THE FIRST TWO GOWNS—A HIGH COLLAR ON A DÉCOLETTÉ DRESS

So sufficient unto itself is the chiffon of this evening dress, a lovely orchid shade suffused with pink, that it disdains trimming. Although innocent of panniers the frock encourages the appearance of them by the manner of its draping. The gowns on this page were designed by Lucile and are worn by Kitty Gordon

The patrician lineage of the sleeveless gown was revealed when suddenly a Grecian model like this one of white chiffon appeared, and the world recognized sleevelessness to be a chip off the Grecian block. From the high girdle of rhinestones drops a Byzantine ornament

Encouraged by successful extensions of territory on coat and blouse, collars now invade the domain of the evening gown. This one is of pink satin to match the skirt and is connected with the white net bodice by pink beads. The tunic ends in a hirondelle train and the underskirt, like the high girdle, is of lace

A SAUCY LOOKING FROCK WITH A TOMMY ATKINS HAT
TO TOP IT, AND A FROCK WHICH LIVES UP TO "MOYEN ÂGE" LINES WITHOUT PLAYING TRAITOR TO THE BASQUE

Not to play traitor to her protégé, the basque, and yet to make terms with the "moyen âge" models she featured at the openings, fashion develops a dress with a long semifitted waist, but with a straight overdress that swings free. The overdress is of white net banded with skunk and delicately embroidered in tan. The underdress is of white charmeuse with waistcoat and bands of gold lace. Gold buttons, gold tassels, a lace cape, and an Elizabethan collar complete the picture. A wave of black ostrich feathers curls over the scrolling brim of the black velvet hat

Scarcely would any one save its own couturier know this model of light-weight tan corduroy for a dress, so skilfully is dissimulation practised in the carefully tailored cutaway jacket-bodice until the sleeves begin; the sleeves let the secret out at once, for they are of tan chiffon. The girdle is of black silk braid and the bands of fur are skunk. The saucy little turban, a Tommy Atkins cap without the chin-strap, is of "tête de nègre" velvet with two self-material wings caught together by a tassel. The stole is of blue fox. The hats and gowns shown on this page are from Burby

GEORGETTE, WHO IS ONE OF THE YOUNGEST DRESSMAKERS IN PARIS, AND WHOSE COLLECTION THIS SEASON WAS ONE OF THE BEST, OFFERS THIS SILHOUETTE AS HER CONTRIBUTION TO THE AUTUMN MODE

Collared within an inch of her life, it seems, is she who wears this quaint costume with a black taffeta bodice flecked with velvet motifs like a Pierrot costume, and finished at the very top with two sharp-pointed spears, their edges all jagged with skunk. Of black velvet, banded at the bottom with fur that it may appear to flare even more than it does, is the skirt. Two black velvet ribbons with roses, red roses, if you please, to weight them, swing over the skirt and a red rose to match is caught to the bodice.

A charmingly foreshortened skirt of wine colored satin banded six inches deep with squirrel and shirred until it is fuller than the imagination of woman has had the capacity to entertain for many a day, runs counter to former conventions and takes unto itself a top of contrasting material. The bodice of pinkish taupe faille is fitted by hook or crook so it looks for all the world like a side-seamed, fitted basque. Old-fashioned cut-steel buttons match the buckle at the front of the bodice. The collar is of squirrel

Far from being dismayed by militarism, fashion sets herself to absorb it; a bodice of purple velvet is silver embroidered across the front in imitation of a soldier's uniform, and but for the lack of epaulettes and the presence of a bit of sentiment in old-fashioned silver buttons shaped like acorns, the ensemble would be severe to the most implacable degree. The black satin skirt assumes in front the nature of an overskirt which merges with the underskirt in the back. Models from Louise and Company

COUTURIERS UNDER ARMS

ON the eve of the battle of fashion openings, August first, French couturiers were called to the battle of nations. Many of them superintended the carrying out of their new-made plans for clothes from the camps situated near Paris. The young Worths, who are English, went to war at the same time that they sent fifty new models to England, and Dœuillet answered the call to arms as he sold what new models he had to American resident commissioners and turned over his great new place, fronting the Vendôme column, to the making of hospital supplies.

Paul Poiret was in his red and blue uniform the fourth of August, and it must be admitted that the impeccable Poiret never looked so ill-dressed as he did in that utterly ugly, French infantry costume. How he must have squirmed at its baggy, foolish lines!

SOUS LES DRAPEAUX

Wagner, of Drécoll's (from which house the word "Vienna" was removed the first day of mobilization) was awaiting his turn to be called as he and his wife, who went immediately to the Red Cross work, finished the best collection of models this house has shown for years,—one considered by many smart American women to be the best shown in Paris this summer. Beer closed his doors on Monday, the first day of the war, and so did Béchoff David. After a week Paris became accustomed to the notice "Sous les drapeaux" on the closed doors. M. Winter, the head of the house of Premet, also went into camp that blue Monday, but he continued his work of designing from the field, and placed M. Matthews, his assistant, in the position of head of the house.

And what of the personalities of these soldiers—fashion creators who have shouldered the musket? It is not possible for any city save Paris to produce extraordinary personalities in the men who make clothes; every thing is against such a proceeding elsewhere. One who carps lightly at the country which is not one's own, explains it by saying that Paris breeds effeminacy, and that dressmaking at the hands of men is effeminate. Such reasoning argues only ignorance, however, for Paris does not call art effeminate. Although the majority of other cities did not, until culture taught them better, regard dressmaking as an art, Paris always has. There lies the difference between Paris and the rest of the world.

PARIS—AND THE REST OF THE WORLD

Vigorous, virile men are these who lay down the law of apparel for the civilized world,—and not only vigorous, but canny in their generation, for they can drive in chaises while their brother artists ride in buses. These dressmakers know how to make money, no simple art in these days; they know how to become pearls with a price, and to manage the financial end of their establishments with as much skill as they manage the art end.

They do not cultivate personality; it is theirs unasked, and is, possibly, the major part of their equipment. They do not seek the lime-light, and unlike their brother artists of the brush or the stage, they do not ask for fame. On the contrary, the traditional sleight of hand trick by which the camel was supposed to get through the eye of a needle is simple compared to what an interviewer must do to speak with one of these men. Even presidents and ambassadors may open their doors to the reporter, but

scribed on Many a Couturier's Door

By ANNE RITTENHOUSE

Though he must have squirmed at the baggy, foolish lines of it, Paul Poiret, who, as he is under forty, was among the first of the reservists to be called out, was in the red and blue uniform of the French infantry on August fourth

Jacques Worth, like his brother Jean, upholds the well-known conservative traditions of the house established by the elder Worth a Paris dressmaker will not; the famous "closed door" phrase might aptly have originated on the rue de la Paix. If the couturiers desire for any reason to have their names in a French paper, they pay for it, and as for American papers—well, they are not eager to rush into American print. They do not see American papers, but they hear and believe queer things of them, and if they ever consent to be interviewed by an American reporter, they are apt to leave out of their conversation every subject of importance to the reading public. Indeed, they are possessed of a desire for privacy in their home life, their hobbies, and their achievements, which does them credit in this era of advertising blatantly as though one were a circus and not an individual. In view of these things it is of especial interest to know something of their lives and ambitions. There is Paul Poiret, with a tremendous personality, unequalled by any other dressmaker, who yet turns a deaf ear to the thousands who want to visit his two places. There are not a handful of people in the world who know of Poiret's historic château near Versailles and his interesting life there, lived quite apart from his business.

THERE IS PAUL POIRET

Poiret is not yet forty years old, which is one of the reasons for his going to war on the first call, but he has stamped his name on the world as Worth did, when, as a very young Englishman, he conquered France. Not by the same methods did these two young men work or gain their fame, however. Worth dressed women as they were; Poiret made women something different so that he could dress them according to an idea he had in his mind. The fame of these two men came forty years apart, but in that space no one has equalled them in dominating personality and the power to stamp that personality on the whole world. The names of other couturiers are great, and so are their achievements, but the other designers have been more plastic and have sought to please rather than to create. Both Worth and Poiret, on the contrary, have said they did not know what fashions were, that they created gowns, thereby proving the saying, so frequently and earnestly repeated, that to create fashions one must ignore them.

POIRET THE PRIMITIVE

Poiret began dressmaking with Doucet. He rapidly showed signs of an amazing individuality, started in business for himself with the best wishes of Doucet, and instantly began to startle the world. He succeeded so well that soon he was able to move into those luxurious quarters on the Avenue d'Antin which were once occupied by the pages of a king. He made use of a large garden not only for the exhibition of gowns, but for the giving of lovely fêtes which were the forerunner of to-day's fashion openings. He created a demand for simple lines and primitiveness of color, and he has never relinquished this idea, the expression of which is the mark whereby one may always and in all places recognize a Poiret creation.

He is a wide traveler and goes to Russia and the east in search of original fabrics and ideas, is an "oriental" scholar of renown, has a fondness for Chinese art and stories as well as for Chinese colorings, and copies many of his decorations from old parchments and documents. He speaks several languages, and even delivers lectures in English.

Poiret has a virulent dislike for the words "fashionable" and "society," and would prefer to be a painter rather than anything else. He makes portraits in his leisure hours and, for diversion, writes poetry. A friend sets it to music, which Poiret himself plays on the piano or the violin, as one prefers, or as the mood takes him. His wonderful country place was built by Gabriel for Louis the Fifteenth; twice a year Poiret gives musicales there in the octagon chamber where kings were wont to rest from the chase in times gone by.

Poiret's wife, Denise, is from Normandy; she is dark and slim, looks like no one else in the world, and wears gorgeous colors in primitive clothes made especially for her by her husband. The three children, two girls and a boy, who are being brought up in a rigid way and under the tutelage of an English governess, are always dressed in the curious Martine cloths.

Poiret likes motoring better than any sport, although he is vastly interested in aeroplaning, and especially in hydroplaning. He is vigorous, intensely nervous, and is utterly unable to abide by the commonplace. When he is dispirited or weary, he seeks inspiration in an octagon room that opens out from the garden on which his home and his establishment face; in this room, with gray walls and floor quite bare, revolves a seventh century Chinese statue, one of the most famous pieces of Chinese sculpture to be found anywhere in the world.

AN AMAZING PERSONALITY

Next to Poiret, Doucet is the most amazing personality among the men in the dressmaking world of Paris. He is often called the most elegant man in France. A great sorrow came into his life about three years ago and changed him completely, or rather broke his spirit,—a love affair that had ruled his life for two decades terminated in death.

In the earlier part of his career, Doucet had a strong ambition to enter French society, and the refusal of the best clubs in Paris to allow him membership because he was in trade was a crushing blow to him. French society has never yielded to the spirit of commerce, as English society has, and it barred M. Doucet. To enter society seems a strange ambition for one so gifted, but he is not the first genius who has cherished this idea and failed to realize it.

Doucet has few friends and no confidants; whether he is indifferent or diffident, no one knows him well enough to say, but he shows no disposition to make friends with people; instead he gives his friendship to books and pictures. He was formerly a noted collector, but a few years ago he sold his hotel and with it his splendid art collection; he still has six million francs, it is said, invested in rare books which he is going to sell. These books are all about art and are now stored away in his home in the rue Spontini.

The things of the eighteenth century are Doucet's hobby; he is an acknowledged authority on this epoch of French history, and his collection of paintings, books, furniture, and tapestries mostly represents this period. The people in his employ love him as few employers are loved, and they stand in awe of his learning and his flawless taste. Every gown goes to him for inspection, and he always contrives to add just the touch which makes it different from all others.

PRESIDENT OF THE SYNDICATE

M. Dœuillet, who has his house in one of the royal mansions on the Place Vendôme, and who is the president of the French Syndicate of Dressmakers, is not pronounced in his personality, but his wonderful head for business and his saneness make him a bulwark for many of the other couturiers. He leaves much of the designing to the heads of his departments and rarely appears before his distinguished customers, as do Worth and Poiret.

M. Winter is the manager of the new and already famous house of Premet; Mme. Premet has retired, and Mme. La Franc has recently

Swiss by birth, Parisian dandy in apparel, M. Armand, junior member of the firm of Martial and Armand, is a designer equipped with clever ideas and much skill in the devising of raiment died, so the house, which has had a meteoric career, is at present without a well-known head.

M. Winter is too young and too new in the profession to have as yet exploited his personality, but he covered himself with honors this summer; to use a current battlephrase "he victoriously repulsed a series of very heavy charges." His brilliant designer dead, the sudden call to arms, the absence of money, the closing of the mills, and the decree of the French Syndicate of Dressmakers that buyers must pay cash when ordering gowns, made a combination of major troubles that closed many other houses, but M. Winter's personality shone in this crisis. He went into camp, continued sending designs for new gowns

Redfern, who is a deep student and a man of wide knowledge of literature and history, as well as art, has tastes more catholic and not as intensely Parisian as are those of most of the couturiers from there, completed his collection on time, and broke from the decree of the syndicate and offered credit to every American who had an account at the house of Premet. This saved the situation for the American market during the first week of war. It showed M. Winter in a good light, and justified his reputation as a keen, sane, and fair man of business. It was a good business stroke which American buyers will not forget.

M. Wagner who is the head of Drécoll's, on the Place de l'Opera, also has a clear, calculating blue eye. The house is supposed to be owned by a financier in Amsterdam; its designer is the lovely and fascinating wife of the manager; but since the first day of August there is no talk of any connection with the famous Austrian establishment. It has been reported that M. Wagner had gone to the front and been wounded, but there is no way of proving it.

AN EXPONENT OF THE PICTORIAL

Redfern is the head of the house bearing his name. He is an Englishman, and he has earned his high position through his talent for designing. He is a creator as are Poiret, Doucet, and Worth. Many of the best actresses in France go to him as their guiding star, and through Mme. Sorel, for instance, he has launched important silhouettes and popular fashions. He is not as intensely Parisian as are Doucet, Callot, Poiret and Chéruit. His tastes are more catholic. This is a natural development through having three houses, one in New York and one in London, as well as one in Paris. Possibly one might say that he leans much toward the styles of the latter part of the 18th century when he is following out his secret inclinations. He likes the pictorial in dress, and has never quite countenanced the extremes of the modern French fashions, of which Callot and Premet are the chief stars. You see, he's an Englishman, and conservatism and elegance come first. Redfern is a deep student and a man of wide knowledge of art, literature, and history—each a source of inspiration for fashion designing.

The older Worth is dead and with him has gone down a five-foot shelf of reminiscences that he refused to make public. In his inland home, where he retreated every night, he gathered about him his beloved books and pictures; and he so isolated himself that the country folk said his yacht sailed into his dining-room, landed him at his dinner table, and returned there for him in the morning.

Only one of these patrons, an English duchess, it is said, ever persuaded him to allow her to enter the place. After she had looked at all the rare and costly bibelots he had collected there, she said that she saw just where all her good English sovereigns had gone, and wished she herself had had the sense to spend them on treasures that the moths did not eat, instead of on Worth gowns which they did eat.

MAKING A LADY LOOK A LADY

The house of Worth is now given over to capable and interesting young sons, who maintain their father's traditions, even to the extent of not allowing members of the half-world to wear clothes designed by them, wherever it is possible to avoid it.

This rule probably represents the most drastic change from the established order of things that has ever been made in a Paris house. That especial kind of trade has always been sought, as it is well known that it advertises a house better than any other. The younger Worths, however, do not bend to this verdict. It has always been said that no one could so make a lady look a lady as could Worth, and by that reasoning, the house yet holds the premier place among a vast number of gentlefolk.

Jean and Jacques Worth work admirably together in the simple house on the rue de la Paix with its magic name inscribed on the brass plate that opens into the courtyard. They look more French than English and represent the new type of dashing

THE DIPLOMATIC PLAYGROUND OF TURKEY

NESTLED at the foot of a cypress-crowned hill on the European side of "Turkey, at the edge of the Bosphorus, is the little town of Therapia. Once the fabled abode of the legendary Medea, from whom, indeed, it takes its name, "Pharmacy of the Poisons of Medea," it is now the summer resort of the diplomatic and European colony at Constantinople and it shelters one of the gayest summer colonies on the Continent, though war and rumors of war have this year dimmed the gaiety there as elsewhere.

From spring to autumn the narrow, sleepy streets are invaded by foreign hosts. Here and there a kavass in gold-braided uniform, the insignia of ambassadorial authority, lends dignity to the scene; carriages drive briskly up and down the one broad boulevard which skirts the shores from Stenia to the Black Sea, while the placid waters of the bay are covered with pleasure craft brilliant in color and with cruisers gay with the fluttering flags of every nation of the world.

A strange little place is Therapia, full of bewildering contrasts and contradictions, which are no small part of its charm. Here modern Europe is brought face to face with ancient Asia and its centuries of history and tradition, and the contrast becomes a part of the life of the place. The sunshine is untempered by shadow of clouds, yet the very atmosphere is tinged by that inexplicable air of melancholy which, like a veil, hangs over all things and places of the east.

HOUSING DIPLOMAT AND DIPLOMATIC ASPIRANT

At Therapia, or within easy reach of it, are to be found the summer palaces of many different embassies. French, German, Austrian, and British diplomats install themselves here for the season, and occasionally the American embassy is here, but as we, like the lesser powers, do not provide a permanent abode for our diplomatic corps, the American ambassador must hire from season to season whatever unpainted villa happens to be vacant at the moment. "Unpainted," is said advisedly, for, as a tax exists in Turkey for the privilege of painting a house, the great majority of native dwellings, even palaces, are in bare and weather-beaten state.

One of the centers of gaiety of this summer colony is the Summer Palace Hotel, an institution quite unique and noted as the refuge of the embryo diplomat, secretary, or attaché, and of the traveler from all lands. It is one of the melting-pots of the earth; Jew, Greek, Armenian, Persian, English, American, Latin, and Teuton gather together there, and the Saturday evening balls present the appearance of an illustrated lecture on the inhabitants of the globe. Brilliant affairs are these balls; the staffs of the different embassies attend, the gowns are elaborate, and the display of jewelry at times rivals the famous collection of Abdul-Hamid himself. This gorgeousness of the costumes of women is thrown into striking relief against the background of the black-coated, red-fezzed Turks who line the walls. Some few Turks who have mastered their feelings and the art of dancing sufficiently are seen twirling in the mazes of the waltz, but, as a rule, even the most liberal content themselves with staring in amazement not unmixed with admiration at the European woman who thus boldly dances in public with men. This conflict of the traditions of east and west gives rise to many amusing episodes. A certain noted pasha, who had for years been military attaché at one of the foreign courts, was asked by a charming American woman with whom he was talking to bring her a glass of water. Complete consternation left the pasha speechless; then, understanding the absence of any intention on her part to offend, he brought the glass of water, but he declined further conversation and retired explaining, "That is the first time I have ever fetched anything for a woman, and it has given me a most unpleasant feeling."

THE CHAIR OF GOSSIP

In so far as its accommodations are concerned, this remarkable hotel is most primitive, unnecessarily primitive, one might think, considering its charges; but the gardens are delightful, and the wide verandas, amply provided with discreetly covered beach chairs and banked with flowers, form admirable nooks for conversations concerning the newest scandal. As one caustic wit of the colony remarked, "The only safe subject to attack in this hotbed of diplomacy is some one's character,—hence the beach chairs."

From these verandas there is a wonderful view over the Bosphorus, across the myriads of lights and colors of the ships anchored in the harbors, to the distant mountains of Asia.

The fleet of cruisers is one of the most picturesque features of the life at Therapia. These great armored yachts provided for each embassy by the respective governments were a matter of necessity in the state of turmoil which formerly existed in the fair land of Turkey, and were liable at any moment to be called into action for the protection of the beleaguered citizens of their countries. With the rise of constitutional government, they became more ornamental than useful, and were chiefly used as pleasure yachts by the ambassadors, until the outbreak of European war again emphasized their potential usefulness.

AT THE ENGLISH EMBASSY

In general, the life is very informal in this diplomatic summer resort. Many of the diplomats select it for this very reason, and rejoice in a summer comparatively free from social obligations. During the administration of Sir Gerard Lowther, the English embassy was, perhaps, the most formal. Much etiquette was observed at private and state functions both by Sir Gerard and by Lady Lowther, who was an American, Miss Alice Blight of Philadelphia. Neither of them ever stepped outside of the embassy gardens even for the most informal stroll without a scarlet-coated, gold-braided kavass to precede and another to form a rear guard. The state pleasure boat was one of the most gorgeous on the Bosphorus, surpassed only by the twelve-oared craft of the Sultan. This boat, which is called a kaik, was like a glorified gondola, long and slender, built of highly polished wood, and cushioned in crimson. Rowed by six stalwart Greeks dressed in white with scarlet jackets and wearing the red fez, it was a most effective bit of color against the brilliant blue of the waters.

The site of the English embassy was selected years ago during the time the great minister of England, Canning, and it does full credit to his judgment, for it is one of the finest situations along the shore. From the terrace there is an uninterrupted view toward the Black Sea in one direction, and as far as the eye can carry toward Constantinople, in the other. On the other side of the Bosphorus rise the giant mountains of Asia, and on the European side, a short distance away, the great twin towers of Roumeli

A S S E E N b y H I M

THERE is a patter of rain against the panes, a howl of wind through the half-naked trees, and a rustle of dry leaves whirling in a mad Dance of Macabre. Autumn is with us, and on such a night as this I am partial to sitting by my own wood-fire at my country place. I have had guests to-night, some of them stopping over for the neighborhood horse show, and others who just came in for dinner—and it is after midnight now, but I always spend an hour before going to bed with a manuscript or a magazine.

I have manifested an amazing magazine habit recently; it is so easily acquired in the country. I am trying to think out some new way of arranging the current literature in my library and sitting-room so that it will be readily at hand and yet will not present either a disordered or a formal appearance. I dislike the usual method of having a table dedicated to periodicals set out in formal rows. That is done at the clubs, and, unfortunately, also in the offices of dentists and physicians; the sight evokes unpleasant memories.

REPOSITORIES OF HORRORS

I had thought to shut out the world this autumn and devote myself to the reading of something cheering and agreeable, but that which has taken place within the past three months is beginning to find its way into the magazines and pictorials and they are repositories of horrors. These same horrors, however, will give a fillip to writing by furnishing new subjects for the inevitable short story. No doubt we shall be deluged with war fiction and in a few months shall be crying out for a change. Perhaps, after all, war fiction will be a relief from the gutter fiction we have had of late. In preference to this brand of literature, I welcome gore and blood and dum-dum bullets and bombs and aeroplanes, women in tears and the shrieks and cries of the wounded and dying.

One hundred years ago, Waterloo was celebrated by long poems and by show pieces for square and cottage pianos. Now and then, I have come across that remarkable chef-d'œuvre, "The Battle of Waterloo," in a volume of bound music belonging to some one's great-grandmother. Oh, Richard Wagner and Richard Strauss! Did you get your first inspiration of descriptive music from this masterpiece? I once heard it executed (literally) in a remote English village where the vicar and his family insisted that I should be one of the audience at a penny concert. The performer began very loud with an imitation of bugles—that was the "advance to the battle"—then came three bangs—that was the cannon. The battle was in broken thirds, fortissimo, the English Horse Guards advanced to the attack in six-eight time, the Prussians also adopted that measure, and then, with growlings in the bass, we were treated to a heavy cannonade. The French retreated to chromatic scales and the Allies rejoiced in an old jig; there were some slow measures in minor chords as lamentation for the slain, and then "God Save the King" and "Rule Britannia" rolled out, and we arose in our places and cheered. With a slight change of motif, perhaps, we may be afflicted in the near future with new battle pieces, their field of operation inestimably widened by mechanical pianos and phonographs.

JUMPING IN THE INDUSTRIAL BREACH

As it is impossible to get away from the subject of war entirely, try as I may, I think I may be allowed to indulge in a few more or less cheerful reflections by the way. We felt quite offended when we saw that we were not to be consulted as to the European outbreak. With all our money and patronage, we were shown quietly

There will rain upon our defenseless heads the munitions of the new novel: guns and helmets and horses and soldiers that we were not wanted and were shooed gently to the seaports and told to get out as quickly as possible. Our newspapers were given no news, and our medallioned war correspondents were not allowed within sniffing distance of powder.

Then, quietly, as "the greatest and richest and most versatile country" on earth, we set about in a great hurry to be the productive depot for crafts and arts and useful and necessary and ornamental articles innumerable. "There will be a famine in toys, because the men in the Black Forest are fighting with the Kaiser," we said. "We have the wood, we have the paint, we have the glue, we have the artisans, and in a short while we can be the toy producers of the world and the 'made in Germany' will be only a memory." Previous to this summer, American inventors of toys had to have them manufactured in Germany; Teddy Bears and Kewpies all came from German workshops.

FASHION ON THE DEFENSIVE

Then there is the momentous question of fashion. For a while things looked pretty black; however it was managed, we were not deprived of Paris inspiration for the early season. The French have not and, unless their armies meet more serious reverses than they now expect, they will not cease to create some feminine apparel. The designers, milliners, and couturiers did not cease to work during the siege of 1870 and even through the terrors of the Commune. Then, too, we remember that it was the women of France who paid the war indemnity demanded by Germany. The great fashion establishments of Paris, the ateliers of the designers, are peopled by women. Even when the head of an establishment is a man, the remainder of the workers are practically all of the other sex. Perhaps in some of the dressmaking places of Paris the tailoring departments will remain closed, but the women ought to work all the harder and they may be inspired to develop new designs just as the writers will be inspired to write new stories.

An incident which took place recently in a modiste's shop of down-town Paris proves how wonderful is the spirit and courage of the Parisians. This was in late August, when Paris did not know what would befall it day by day. From one of the best known houses on the rue de la Paix, two hat models were brought over by one of the last American buyers to leave the city. One was shaped like the cocked hat of a French general, and the other was copied from the Prussian helmet and topped with a great standing plume. "It will be a wonder," said the wholesaler who sold the hats, "if they do not fight each other on the passage over. I think it will be best for you to put them in separate show cabinets after they arrive in America." Of course, this is a joke at which you may smile if you will.

SOMETHING, IF NEED BE, OF NOTHING

Perhaps what I have scribbled here may contain a cheerful message for my fair friends. There will always be fashions. Fashion can never be utterly routed. It will find some way out, will produce something—if necessary out of nothing. As one observer observed, "If a man can not find on a menu any good things to eat, he will order roast beef. If he can not find any blended colors in neckwear, he will buy a plain black scarf." Here is an example. At Newport I admired what could be called a perfect duck of a hat, worn by a fashionable woman, which had its chic in its absolute simplicity. And she told me the secret. It was a plain shape and the material which trimmed it did not cost twenty sous a yard in Paris and would cost little more here. But it was chic. It was one of Suzanne Talbot's. So you can see what can be done. And even if the stronghold of men's fashions, London, be annihilated, we will, I hope, yet be able to manage with our special designs in tweeds and our ties and our hats and other necessities.

We can do the big things here; we can finance and feed the world, but when it comes to these details in crafts—well, it takes time and also it requires an absolute contentment with position and station. Then, too, it needs the esprit de corps which makes each of the European workshops a little family even if there are no ties of relationship between employed and employers. There they work for the sake of work—and art; here work is toil and the employer is apt to be looked upon as a tyrant. Even below stairs, American servants refer contemptuously to the kindest and most considerate of mistresses as "She."

GIVING the SAINT HIS DUE

EVER since men went to hangings Virtue has enjoyed, or rather suffered, a continual succès d'estime. Between yawns we have yielded her a perfunctory applause, but we have reserved our enthusiasm for her wayward sister Wickedness. We are wont to consider goodness as something eminently respectable but profoundly uninteresting; evil has a monopoly of the glamour and excitement of life. Even the feeble sympathy that once we showed for innocence distressed seems now to have vanished utterly. Every hero must have his prison-record and every heroine her past. Whence comes this popularity of the "dear criminal"? The ingenuous optimist may ascribe it to the appeal of that which is unlike ourselves, or misanthropy may lead us to condemn thereof the innate depravity of human character. But on reflection it becomes clear that vice is more engrossing than virtue because of its greater variety. Kipling to the contrary, men are pretty well convinced that there is only one way of doing a thing rightly, while of course there are innumerable means of making a mistake. Hence the superior dramatic appeal in all writers, from Homer to Shaw, of Hades over Heaven; there is such a delightful variety among sinners, while saints are so hopelessly alike. "A life in which nothing happens"—so Auerbach characterized the cloister; and thus we are apt to imagine the monasterial monotony of virtue.

WHAT can goodness say in answer to this indictment? The charge is a heavy one, for the greatest sin of all is to be a bore. Will she not employ—and with justice—the common defense of the censored, that her critics have misunderstood her? Virtue is not a static condition of triumph, but an essentially kinetic and militant process. Virtue is no bespectacled spinster, peacefully embroidering Bible texts on pillow-cases, but a young and lovely Britomart, clad in shining armor. "Chastity," said Chesterton, "is not merely abstention from sexual wrong. It is something flaming, like Joan of Arc." The peasant girl of Domremy, she of the bloody coronation robes, does not want for artistic interest.

ON the other hand, the stylites type of virtue has as little ethical value as it has dramatic appeal. Set the devil himself on a pillar in the Egyptian desert and he will keep out of mischief until he gets down. The diary of St. Simeon would interest only a meteorologist; but true morality is never monotonous, for in its very nature it is an endless and ever varying conflict. It is the glory of the middle ages that they saw this truth clearly, and erected upon it their wonderful institution of chivalry. Men of blood and battle, they fought for salvation as for a dukedom, and they wore not the gown but the greaves in the service of the Lord. And no other period in the history of the world has been the equal of theirs for romance.

WE no longer join in single combat at the crossroads; but life is still a struggle, and virtue must still, as with the Romans, be synonymous with valor. Being good is just as exciting and just as dangerous now as when the strength of the sword-stroke depended upon the purity of the heart. To meet temptation and to overcome it; to follow an ideal through every obstacle, and when this ideal has been achieved to choose another and a nobler one; to stand forth as the public champion of justice and liberty—such a program would leave little time for monotony, and the story of its execution may prove as interesting reading as the adventures of a Don Juan or a J. Rufus Wallingford.

FOR the SAKE of PEACE!—PEACE

Having Completely Overwhelmed Their Antagonists with Arguments, the Advocates of Universal Peace Leave Naught for Their Hapless Opponents to Do Save to Sue for Peace on Any Terms

BY TOPSY TURVEYDROP

PEOPLE are talking so much nowadays about universal peace, and the movement is gaining adherents so rapidly, that it really seems to be quite progressive. Besides, everybody who believes in it says that it is bound to win (I heard a poet say that the other day in a lecture) and so of course one ought to support it; because, if it's certain to come anyway, we might as well have the credit of having been on the right side. There are all sorts of arguments in favor of it, too. War is very expensive for one thing, and being prepared for war is nearly as bad; and if the money they spend for battleships and things were given to the poor, it would reduce the cost of living. Then modern scientific warfare is horribly destructive, besides not being any fun: the romance is all gone out of it. Being mowed down by a machine so far away that you can't see it is as unromantic as a railroad accident, and about as dreadful. Of course there are reactionary people who say that we must have gone through all that when bows and arrows were invented, and again when gunpowder was discovered: that the principle is the same, and it's only a question of degree. Well, the principle is the same whether you have a drop or a spoonful of tabasco on your oysters: it's only a question of degree; but the degree rather makes a difference.

A PERFECTLY BEAUTIFUL ARGUMENT

But there is one perfectly beautiful argument in favor of peace that nobody seems to have thought of yet. At least, many of us have it subconsciously in mind, but it has not been adequately set forth. And that is the perfectly familiar and chivalrous idea that the stronger must not strike the weaker. That used to mean

NOTE:—Needless for the editor to remark that Topsy Turveydrop conceived this delicious treatise on Universal Peace, than which nothing could be more topsyturvy, before the war broke forth and Fate itself supplied the final topsyturvical touch merely that a big man shouldn't attack a smaller; it was all right for him to defend himself if the little man hit him first. But nowadays we are much more magnanimous than that, and we see that the really ethical rule is that the big man is a coward if he hits the small one in any case; for the big man (whoever began it) would be just as certain to win, and the other would have no chance. It wouldn't be fair. You have no right to beat a helpless little boy who throws a snowball at you, for instance; any ordinary modern person would tell you to take somebody of your own size. Of course, you might have him arrested, but that would be arbitration, and even that would be rather mean. We agree then, that the stronger may not fight the weaker. Now observe: if the stronger is forbidden to strike, then the weaker becomes the stronger in his turn, for the whole point was that the weaker would have no fair chance. But what chance would a big man have against a little man whom he was not allowed to touch? Just about as much as you have against the boy with the snowball. So A (being bigger) is a coward if he hits B; therefore B is a coward if he hits the defenceless A; therefore they mustn't fight at all. And there is no escape from the dilemma in supposing both to be of equal strength. If they really were absolutely equal, the fight would be a draw, and neither could win, and there would be no sense in it. If they were only apparently equal, one of them must prove stronger in the actual test. So they would have fought to see which was the stronger, and as soon as they found out, it would prove them both cowards. When people tell you to take somebody of your own size, there practically never is anybody of your own size around; or if there is, he hasn't done anything to you. And the only alternative is Universal Peace.

THE WHOLE PROBLEM SETTLED

Just see how thoroughly that settles the whole problem, and eliminates unnecessary discussion,—to say nothing of its being so perfectly in harmony with the best modern thought and the spirit of the advancing age. All the more progressive of us have been feeling for a long time that it is unworthy of the greater force to override the lesser, and also that fighting is a relic of barbarism and an obsolete and reactionary method of settling a controversy. And now, since the one law follows logically from the other, both must be true and everything is settled comfortably. Perhaps in time we shall thus do away, not only with actual warfare, but with all disagreements. Take a question like Universal Peace itself, for example. If it is bound to come, as its adherents aver, why then (in a higher spiritual sense) it must be cowardly of them to struggle for it, since their opponents have no chance against them. Once that is recognized, it becomes equally so for their opponents to oppose it. And so we shall some day have no controversies whatever, but all together put our shoulders to the wheel, while the march of humanity rises ever broader and higher upon the wings of unity and brotherhood.

REDFERN ISSUES A PROCLAMATION OF RESPLENDENCY WITH A MONASTIC POSTSCRIPT TACKED ON

In possession of the mode, black velvet brings all ten points of the law to bear in a velvet suit with a great deal of waistcoat

BLACK velvet takes advantage of all ten points of the law behind which, as possessor of the mode, it may entrench itself and appears in hats, wraps, suits, and everything else. Sketched above is a black velvet afternoon gown which Redfern calls "Primeur." The coat and skirt are of soft black velvet and the waistcoat is of "vellum" velvet. "Vellum" is a new shade that has a bluish white or yellowish white tone according to the light in which it is seen. The revers and the lower part of the waistcoat are embroidered in black and white silk so cunningly combined as to give a silvery appearance.

Across the hips at the back, a flat girdle of the vellum velvet striped with horizontal rows of the black and white embroidery is fastened to the coat with jet buttons. Jet buttons fasten the waistcoat in front. A wide band of puntois is laid flat on the skirt about two inches above the bottom, and on neck and sleeves. The Redfern evening gown called "La Reine des Indes," shown on this page, lives up to all the latest rules of resplendency issued by Paris. A series of gold tassels extends down the front of the black satin skirt, and gold is repeated in the corsage. A Persian bolero, stiff with embroidery, forms the greater part of the corsage, and flesh colored tulle is folded about the figure under the bolero. Shoulder straps of black satin bordered in gold hold the corsage in place. The flaring tunic is of black satin embroidered in gold tinsel and a wide band of black fox finishes it at the bottom.

"Le Père Capucin," the monk-like Redfern dress of bure (a material similar to sackcloth) illustrated at the upper right, is in a warm shade of tobacco brown. White serge is used for the wide cuffs, the lining of the cowl, the narrow facings down the long robe, and for the wide hem on the underslip of bure. Two long separate pieces of the bure that form a sort of outer garment are held together about the hips by a brown silk cord; a brown silk embroidery motif on the breast and a long brown silk tassel on the cowl at the back give the final ecclesiastical touches. This model is also developed in white serge with white fox on hem and cuffs and cowl.

WITHIN the THRESHOLD of the TOWN HOUSE

Though Divested of the Social Grandeur of the Great Hall of Ancient Times, the Entrance Hall Still Retains an Atmosphere of Dignity castle. Here the lord of the household received his guests, here often the banquets of state were served, and here were held the balls and revels of those picturesque days.

It will be noted, therefore, that the hall of a home several centuries ago combined the uses now performed by drawing-room, dining-room, and ball-room. The dividing among many rooms of the various functions previously allotted the great hall, affords opportunities for giving to each room an individuality and character which could hardly be given to the one room used for so many different purposes.

A PROBLEM SOLVED

The entrance hall of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish is interesting as representing a successful solution of a problem which presents itself where a city home is built upon a plot as small as the average city lot. Space must be utilized with all possible economy, and yet the interior must be sufficiently spacious to afford dignity and breadth.

Where a house is to be built upon a corner this may be done, as in the present instance, by placing the entrance at the side having the greater dimension, with the main doorway opening directly into the entrance hall, which, as it occupies the full width of the plot, is sufficiently deep to contain the stairway leading to the principal rooms upon the floor above.

In this instance the entrance hall is treated with the utmost simplicity. The decoration of the walls, which is in French period style, consists of gracefully

PLANNING the entrance hall of a city home is quite different from the comparatively simple task of arranging the hallway of a country house. In the case of the city residence there are many problems to solve, for the hall must receive both light and air and must maintain certain very definite and well defined relations to the rest of the house. It must also more than any other room adapt itself to the exterior of the building. In olden days the great hall was the chief apartment of a home or

Unusually spacious and beautiful is the entrance hall which occupies the entire width of the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William Goadby Loew. Drawing-room, reception-room, and dining-room lie beyond the first landing of the stairway, which continues upward to the balcony that runs about the entire room, passing above the entrance door as is shown in the small view below proportioned paneling against which are placed very simple ornamentation in relief and one or two old French portraits. The cream or pale gray of the walls is a well chosen background for the color in the rugs, the rich French bronze of the stair-rail, and the soft tones of an antique embroidery used as a drapery. A marble bench or settee, behind which are placed palms closely grouped, conceals the service stairway, and the hall and stairway are lighted by brackets hung against the wall and fitted with electric lights in candle shapes. It would be difficult to imagine a hallway more dignified and simple or better suited in any way to the purpose for which it is intended to be used.

WHEN THE HOUSE IS MIDWAY IN A BLOCK

The entrance hall of the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Goadby Loew presents a wholly different solution of the problem of the hallway. Here the house has not been built upon a corner but upon a narrow lot about midway in a city block. The architects have very wisely devoted the entire width of the lot on the ground floor to the hall and its stairway, and the result is an entrance unusually spacious and beautiful.

The plan places the drawing-room, reception-room, and dining-room also upon the ground floor and just beyond the landing of the stairway. Considerable space is thus given to these apartments, which occupy the full width and also the entire depth of the plot. The two pictures of the hall show the unusual arrangement, for the stairs with their landings completely encircle the wall, which is lighted not only by the glass panels beneath the wrought iron grill of the door, but also by windows upon the stair landing, which look out upon Madison Avenue. The unusual amount of light is especially noteworthy, as it is so difficult to obtain in a hall.

The walls of the hall are faced with stone of a warm brown tone; the four columns are of polished marble and their capitals, like the balustrade of the stairs, are of gilt bronze. Furniture of old gilt is used, tapestry hangs upon the wall or is draped between the pillars, and gilt candelabra or torches placed in formal fashion in the corners of the hall lend an air of luxurious spaciousness to the surroundings.

The beautiful Astor residence at Fifth Avenue and 65th Street was originally planned as two residences and these having been combined into one spacious home has resulted in a series of rooms of great distinction and of unusual size. The removal of a stairway which was unnecessary with the house in its present form has made possible a very large hall or court upon the ground floor. One enters through a vestibule separated from the hall by a grill or screen of wood elaborately carved, across which is sometimes drawn a curtain of heavy damask or velours.

The walls of the hall are of Caen stone, and about three sides runs a corridor connected with the hall by a series of arches. Overhead is a domed ceiling of glass and bronze elaborately worked in a design which agrees with the French Renaissance architecture of the house. Owing to the unusual size of the building, the principal rooms are arranged upon the ground floor, and the drawing-room, library, dining-room and other formal apartments open from the hall.

The furnishings of the hall itself are of a luxurious simplicity. Antique tapestries are hung against the stone walls of the surrounding corridor, and chairs and settees covered with old Flemish tapestry are formally arranged about the main hall. The rich green of palms, bay-trees, and English ivy adds to the beauty of the setting and the lighting fixtures of bronze are copies of old French candelabra.

THE GLORIES OF ANTIQUITY

The quiet reticence of the residence of the late William C. Whitney on Central Park conveys no idea of the splendor of its interior, for the entrance doorway opens into what is a treasure house of antiquity and of the art of many countries and periods. Treasures of medieval Europe have been brought to adorn its rooms, and many of the usual domestic furnishings of the house possess an artistic value which would assure them a place of honor in the greatest museums. The house as it stands is really a Florentine palace transplanted from the city by the Arno and set down upon Fifth Avenue.

GREAT HOUSES AND CASTLES

OLD IN STORY WHICH ARE

FOR THE ENGLISH WOUNDED

THE great country seats and famous castles of England, which according to the usual English social program would now be the scenes of brilliant entertainments, have been generously offered to the Red Cross Society for use during the war and are prepared for the care of wounded soldiers.

Notable among them is "Lambeth Palace,"—a photograph of which appears in the middle of the page,—which for over six hundred years has been the London residence of the archbishops of Canterbury. The palace is situated on the right bank of the Thames from Westminster Bridge, almost facing the Houses of Parliament. While the oldest part of it, the early English chapel, was built by Archbishop Boniface in 1245, the part actually occupied during more recent years dates only from 1829 to 1834. Next to the chapel, the most ancient portion of the palace is the Lollard's tower—so called because the Lollards, or followers of Wyclif, were supposed to have been kept and tortured there.

One of the largest mansions accepted for the care of the English wounded, and, in fact, one of the greatest houses in England, is "Wynyard," a photograph of which appears at the top of this page. It is situated nine miles from Stockton-on-Tees, Durham, and is now the residence of the sixth Marquis of Londonderry. Especially interesting is the great room dedicated to the memory of the third Marquis of Londonderry, who fought at Waterloo under the Duke of Wellington.

Also "Walmer Castle" (shown below), the official residence of the lord warden of the Cinque Ports—on the Kent coast—has been converted into a temporary hospital by the present lord, the Earl Beauchamp, who was installed last summer.

ENGLAND'S EXTREMITY IS WOMAN'S OPPORTUNITY

OF course every one in America has read all about the memorable, moneyless week in London. It took the place of the Cowes Regatta. But only those who have been among the sans gallette can grasp its weirdness. Imagine twenty thousand Americans stranded in the Strand—and without a farthing among them. The different ways people took their plight were endlessly entertaining to those who could stand by and philosophize. But whether they laughed it out or looked as grave as they had more than a right to, they showed themselves a pretty sporting lot, these trapped Americans.

The versatile Americans had not been in from the Continent fifteen minutes before they were hard at work organizing a way out of their troubles. A relief committee announced its organization with headquarters at the Savoy Hotel, and in a misery-loves-a-mate spirit the penniless millionaires took possession of the place. Ordinarily one would hardly think of turning to the Savoy in his hour of penury, would he? But this was world-war and these were—most extraordinary—Americans without money. It was either to weep at the thought of all these guides, counselors, and counseled in such straits, or to don one's latest evening frock,—for even in war-time London continues to dress for dinner,—ring up some friend reputed to have a half-crown, and fare forth to the Savoy.

From the tales afloat it would not have been a surprise to find a depressed, frippery crowd with a clean-shaven committee benevolently handing out filet-of-sole-with-Burgundy tickets or coupons entitling the holder to room-and-bath. My word! Instead of such a scene there were mobs of gorgeous ones; it was just after dinner, and the nine o'clock brilliance of the Savoy radiated in every direction. Every one wore a replete, contented look and smart evening clothes.

Most of the women were just over from Paris, and though some of them were in tidy little traveling outfits—the last inspiration in tunics and toques—there were many of the new evening frocks on view, the ones with the extremely short skirts and the bodices composed of tulle, sequins, and imagination. The majority of the men were dazzlingly waistcoated. Champagne was being trotted about, the orchestra was playing "My Own United States," and everybody seemed to be having almost as good a time as if they had remained at home and stopped at the Plaza.

London at Last in the Hands of the Feminists, Moneyless and Manless—"A Million Pairs of Socks to Knit," Remarked a Pensive Little Countess; "Some Socks," Murmured an American Expatriatess, and Dropped a Stitch

As for the benevolent committee, to see the zeal, the absorption, the coats-off-perfectly-at-homeness of the men who are unraveling the tourists' tangle in the subterranean rooms at the Savoy, far from the regions of fizz and fashion, is to come away with the faint suspicion that the real American business man would rather "organize" than look at the pictures of the primitive masters or study old Jacobean porticoes.

SOCIETY ON A NEW TACK

Instead of society being off shooting, yachting, and flirting, it has turned over its country house, its town house, its yacht, and its everything-that-is-its to the Red Cross or the navy. The Englishmen have vanished and the women are sewing or knitting or otherwise occupying themselves on behalf of the charming, clean-cut young chaps who every day leave for the front.

The ballroom at Claridge's has been converted into a colossal sewing-circle; the army has asked for a million pairs of socks. "It's a bit of an order, isn't it?" a pensive little countess remarked to an American girl with beautiful Irish eyes and a Paris hat. The American girl was counting stitches; "Some socks," she murmured absently.

Every big ballroom in London has been turned over to some sewing-circle. Between performances the stages of some of the music-halls are filled with pretty chorus girls making flannel shirts, slips for hot water bottles, pajamas, and nightingales. There is also a renaissance of knitting. Nobody wastes a moment; women knit in the parks, on the tops of omnibuses, and while they wait for luncheon at restaurants. An old man sat knitting in Temple Garden the other day. He had only one leg but there was nothing wrong with the way he used his fingers. It's a hundred to one he was making the "smooth socks" that the army is imploring women to send,—the kind that won't blister on the march. It's a frightful responsibility, knitting a pair of army socks.

The Red Cross work at Devonshire House has made a hive of grim industry out of the hitherto gay palace in Piccadilly with its legends of royalty-graced dinners and dances. Queens continue to visit it. Alexandra, Amélie, Victoria of Portugal are often there, but on serious missions. The little crowd that is accustomed to drift lazily over from St. James's Park and through the grill to watch the great ones arriving at a Devonshire House function, is to-day watching the big supply tent being erected in the court, the procession of preoccupied officials with the scarlet emblem on their sleeves, and the vans loaded with surgical supplies for the front.

RECRUITING TAXICABS

The flippant taxicab is the latest and most serious recruit to the enlistment propaganda. The taxis are up to their meters in war eloquence. Across the wind-shields are startling, printed posters bearing the country's call to arms so that he who is run over may read. It is picturesque and stirring to see a very grande dame indeed spinning down Piccadilly in a bright green taxi behind the words, letters a foot high, "One Million Men Wanted," or a benign looking churchman in a shovel hat motoring up Ludgate Hill to St. Paul's and flying the slogan, "Enlistment for War Only."

The war has brought forward an amazing number of women from the so-labeled "idle" social ranks, who have won their nursing diplomas. Naturally the desire burns to put their knowledge into practise; one army man remarked, rather whimsically, that if things kept on there would be at least four nurses to every wounded soldier.

Many of the theatres opened after a few days of closed doors, and they have cheered things up a bit. At the Empire, for example, Mr. Lewis Waller, late of "The Garden of Allah," declaims Kipling

Devonshire House, the gay palace in Piccadilly renowned as a setting for the functions of the great ones, has been converted by the Red Cross activities, directed by Queen Alexandra, into a hive of grim industry

While following the dictates of the mode as regards flare and flatness, a suit of dark "colours de laine" shows considerable ingenuity in the manner in which the flare is introduced at the side by plaits, and the flatness is relieved in front by broad revers and in back by crossed tabs

Possessed of possibilities truly astonishing is a model which will serve equally well either for coat or for frock, either for morning or for afternoon dress, according to the materials in which it is developed. If intended for formal wear a dull metal belt is a smart touch

SMART FASHIONS for LIMITED INCOMES.

BEFORE the outbreak of the war new models had been made which showed general tendencies, some of which may be turned to good account by those who are restricted in means. The dress in one-piece or in a simulated one-piece effect is having a renewed vogue, as is also the long separate coat, which may be worn over a frock of this kind. With one really smart coat and several pretty dresses, pleasant changes of costume may be made with comparatively small expense. The suit with a short coat is, however, not excluded, but is, in fact, an equally important factor in the mode.

COAT OR DRESS OR WHAT YOU WISH

A very simple model which could be adapted for either a coat or a dress is shown at the right on page 58. In gabardine with fur collar and cuffs it would make an excellent long coat, while made of corbeau blue velvet with smaller collar and cuffs of fur, and the pockets of braid, it would be a very smart afternoon dress. The long, loose-fitting Russian blouse might be girdled by a metal belt, which is new, while beneath the tunic a slightly circular underskirt of silk braid might be used.

A whipcord or a practical woolen serge of some sort in dark blue or black would be among the most serviceable materials for the morning frock sketched at the lower left corner of this page. The front edges of the dress might be outlined with

Pointing Out Certain Tendencies in the New Mode Which Have Unusual Economic Possibilities, and Indicating Ways and Means of Taking Advantage of Them

Upon the foundation of a last year's basque or a tight-fitting bodice one may fashion this quaint little blouse

Jet-trimmed tulle tunics and velvet corselet transform a last year's frock into one distinctly of this season

WITH CONSERVATISM IN MIND

A smart suit that would answer for general wear for those who find that a suit best meets their requirements, is sketched at the left on page 58. This could be made of one of the soft velours gabardines in a dark color—black, blue, green, and brown are very smart this season. The front is single breasted and made with very broad revers which form long tabs that cross in the back. The flare is given the coat by inverted plaits at the sides. The same effect is seen in the skirt, which also has an inverted plait at each side. This arrangement keeps the front and back flat to conform with a distinct tendency of the winter mode, and gives the fulness on the sides. The revers and cross sections may be of velvet. A separate collar of fur to match the muff could be of dyed raccoon or black fox.

The separate blouse shown at the right of the middle of this page is suggested as a possibility for remodeling. A tight-fitting satin waist, or possibly one of the basque dresses of the past season, would serve as a foundation upon which could be arranged an overblouse of silk in Chinese coloring, or of a plain silk embroidered in a conventional design in dull greens, reds, and yellows, with possibly a gold thread outlining the main design. The turnover collar, which fits the neck more closely than the collars of last season, could be either of satin or of chiffon.

A very excellent design which could be used for remodeling an evening dress is shown at the upper right on this page. Almost every one has a satin or net dress made with the tunics of last season. A net dress in good condition may be remodeled in a way suggested by the sketch, or new flounces of net may be placed on a charmeuse underskirt, and each flounce as well as the underskirt may be outlined by jet beads. Small rhinestones set between beads which match the color of the dress may, if desired, be substituted for the jet. The bodice of last season could practically be discarded, leaving only the lining; over it a loose-fitting bodice of velvet or satin cut as shown in the illustration and outlined with rhinestones set between beads could be worn. This bodice may be made sleeveless or it may have long tulle sleeves caught into the cuffs and finished with a frill.

Note.—In order to make the "Smart Fashions for Limited Incomes" department of greater practical value to the woman of restricted means, Vogue will cut to order, in the sizes of 34 to 40 inches bust only, the patterns of models published under this department at the special price of $1 for a separate skirt, jacket, or bodice; $1.50 for a three-quarter-length coat, and $2 for a suit or gown.

Tracery of braid upon the bodice, silk cuffs and a silk facing on collar and sash, enliven a morning frock

Faille is smart and so is a silk in Chinese design, and the two combined make a very attractive frock a somewhat narrow silk braid. Similar braid might be used to outline the high turnover collar across the back, and to cover the seams across the front and over the tops of the sleeves. The looped girdle, which is of the braid in a wider width faced with silk, is attached to a wide belt of the material, which extends across the back and sides. Similar silk is used to form the cuffs and line the standing collar. The skirt is a plain model cut slightly circular with the fulness at the sides; the front and back are flat.

A FLUTTERING SHOULDER DRAPERY, A FLOATING SCARF, A SWINGING TUNIC—ANY ONE OF THESE MAY IMPART THAT MOTION WITHOUT WHICH A DRESS LACKS THE QUALITY OF "LIFE"

A sash drawn across the bust, crossed in back, then caught in front beneath a rose; a skirt of the pink charmeuse to fill in the gaps; and, oh yes, a spray of tulle, captured beneath a bead band, to float over each shoulder and impart that motion which brings a dress to life and catches the eye

A Premet dress which has life, yet without that uneasy fluttering of loose ends that bespeaks lack of poise. About the bust is drawn a cuirass of black paillettes and satin. One ruffle of tulle floats out from the hips, and a second, weighted with skunk, swings from the knees. Models from Maison Maurice

To carry a theory to its illogical conclusion is often as convincing as the reverse—and twice as charming. Given the hypothesis that fulness is charm, this wrap of gleaming white panne velvet, bordered with tailless ermine, introduces as much fulness as a cloak could well carry in so short a space

ALLIED ON THE DEFENSIVE AGAINST THE
WINDS OF WINTER—WARM MATERIALS, FUR TRIMMINGS, AND VERY VOLUMINOUS FOLDS

Boldly asserting its individuality comes a coat of violet corduroy which opposes the almost unanimous fulness of the mode with a skirt so scanty that there must needs be a slash at each side if the wearer is to walk. Rows and rows of stitching, as many as ten or twelve together, are its only trimming, and a high collar ending in scarf ends contributes a final snug touch

That the subdued glint of tinsel may enliven even a daytime coat is illustrated in a model of redingote proclivities which is of black, green, red, and gold brocade banded with fur. This is of a type frequently employed by the house of Chéruit for wraps, suit coats, and for the coat of a contrasting material, which this season many times accompanies the smart one-piece frocks of the mode

Modeled after the manner of Chéruit is a coat of warm-looking, rough material, narrow at the top and wide at the bottom according to the ruling of the mode, and trimmed in prescribed fashion with bands of fur. Beneath the broad belt there is room aplenty for a convenient little pocket, and the right front closing, swung almost half about across the figure, gives an unusually graceful line

A Bevy of Tricorn Hats, Autumn Suits Which Measure the Proper Width and Height of the Mode, and a Line of Smart Footwear

PARIS has decreed that fur trimming on suits or dresses shall be wide. Ordinarily this would mean great expense, but in the case of the suit sketched at the lower left of the page an excellent Bernard model has been beautifully copied at a price that is particularly reasonable. The material is a suède-finished broadcloth, and the model may be had in any of the new shades or in black, trimmed with French seal bands. The coat has the smart flare over the hips that is such a notable feature of this season's models; it also has the side closing and the high collar, all of which points will mark the new models for this autumn and winter. The skirt has a moderate flare and is a circular model hung from a deep hip-yoke. The buttons which fasten the coat are large and of a curious dark shell which tones beautifully with the broadcloth and fur.

With this suit is shown one of the convenient small velvet hats which fit snugly on the head and are excellent for winter wear. The hat, which may be had in black or colored velvet, is trimmed with a sphinx metal band tied in a bow in front.

The suit shown at the lower right of the page is a practical model which has a degree of style that is largely due to the simplicity of the design and the cleverness of the cut. The back is made in a particularly clever way. The suit may be had in either broadcloth or cheviot with a trimming of black velvet. Worn with furs, a suit of this type gives excellent service and is not so marked in character as to become tiresome. The skirt is shirred a trifle in the back and is quite plain in front and at the sides. Corbeau blue velvet and grosgrain ribbon compose the chic little hat sketched with this suit. In cheviot this suit is priced at $30, and in broadcloth at $35.

There is no question about the great vogue of sleeveless evening frocks. Since Paris first showed them some time ago, they have gradually been growing in popularity until now one scarcely sees any sleeves in evening frocks, unless it be mere wisps of tulle or chiffon. The pretty Jenny model illustrated at the upper right of this page is a simple exponent of the sleeveless fad; wisps of tulle could be added for sleeves if they were desired. An excellent quality of crêpe meteor with a high satin luster is the material used in this frock and the colors in which it is shown are particularly lovely: odd shades, such as robin's egg blue, flamingo, and other smart colors that are especially successful in a frock of this kind, the character of which lends itself well to high tones. However, the frock is pretty as well in black, white, or flesh colored crêpe meteor.

DRESSING FOR DIFFERENT PARTS

Much more filmy is the charming frock sketched at the upper left of the opposite page. It is of the new silver-run lace hung over delicately shaded satin. The string colored net used in this case makes the silver thread backed by the sheen of the satin most effective. The net also forms the cape-like overbodice that is bound by the new, flat, silver thread. All the delicate evening shades, such as soft yellow, flesh color, and light blue, are successful as the satin in this model. The flower which seems to hold the tiny jacket fronts of the waist together is of a brilliant shade which makes a suitable contrast to the delicacy of the general tone of the frock.

Black satin, black Chantilly lace, and black net compose the restaurant dress sketched on this page. It has the new high girdle that forms a portion of both bodice and skirt. The slanting effect of the lower line of the girdle is repeated in the lace flounces of the skirt. The sleeves are of net, as is the front of the waist and the pretty box-plaited ruche which stands up at the back of the neck.

Of the softest Georgette crêpe is the lovely blouse sketched at the left at the bottom of the opposite page. It is prettily hemstitched and has a most unusual yoke and a becoming collar. In flesh color this waist is prettiest, although in white or black it looks exquisitely fine. Soft waists of this kind are always in demand because they are so becoming. Georgette crêpe launders and wears well and such a waist as this is satisfactory in every way.

Very simple is the plaited chiffon blouse illustrated at the right at the bottom of the opposite page. It may be had in almost any shade, or in black or white. It is made over white net and has a double collar of white crêpe; the lower collar is edged with chiffon to match the color of the blouse. The pretty white-rimmed buttons are of a color to match the chiffon of the waist.

Three chic little velvet hats are illustrated on this and the opposite page. The one sketched at the upper left on this page is in a combination of black hatter's plush (silk beaver) and black velvet; the velvet forms a rim about three inches deep at the upper edge of the brim. A feather fancy posed at a smart angle is the sole trimming.

Somewhat similar in general outline to the hat just described is the small tricorn shown at the upper right. Although it may be had in black and in any color of velvet it is particularly pretty in corbeau blue. The edge is bound with grosgrain ribbon and a stubby feather fancy is posed at the front.

Of sphinx colored velvet, bound in the popular sphinx metal braid and trimmed with a sphinx metal bird, is the tricorn illustrated at the top of the opposite page. It runs high on the right side and dips low on the left and at the back; the angle is especially smart. This hat is also especially attractive in the new beet root shade with a sphinx trimming.

A ROW OF SHOES

Most of the boots and slippers for the winter are developments along the same general lines of those shown last season. However, the new boots and slippers are more interesting than usual. To out-Paris Paris comes a pailletted slipper to accord with the pailletted frock. The one shown at the bottom of the page is of white satin covered with iridescent spangled net. The spangles are the smallest that may be had and the whole effect is glitteringly delicate. This slipper may be ordered in green, electric blue, or any shade of satin and paillettes to match a costume.

Cloth or buckskin top-boots continue to be as popular, if not more so, than they were last season. The tops are usually dark gray or fawn colored; the gray tops are often used in combination with dull leather for informal wear. Quite new is the idea of a laced gaiter top-boot such as the one shown at the lower left on this page. In this case, the top is either of dark gray or fawn buckskin with the vamp and back portion of dull kid. The shoe has a Spanish Louis XV heel, and a light-welt sole.

Another light top-boot for informal wear is photographed second from the right at the bottom of the page. It has a two-inch Cuban Louis heel and a light-weight hand-stitched sole. The last is a particularly slender one and the boot is extremely smart. It may also be had with a patent leather vamp and a fawn buckskin top, or with a bronze kid vamp and a bronze suede top. In the model illustrated the vamp is of black Russian calf with a top of gray or snuff colored buckskin. In each case the price is the same.

Quite the smartest type of dress boot is the patent leather vamp, cloth top gaiter boot illustrated third from the left at the bottom of the page. Gaiter buttoned boots were last season found quite uncomfortable to put on and take off. The boot illustrated, however, has a sufficient opening on the side to facilitate putting the shoe on without any undue effort. It has a two-inch heel of the style known as a Cuban Louis, and the sole is of a light-weight extension type. In the boot illustrated the top may be of fawn colored or gray buckskin.

The simple afternoon boot photographed at the lower right is in excellent taste. It has a moderate last and a vamp of patent colt with a top of black cravanette. The same boot may be had with a vamp of gun-metal leather. The model has a light welt sole and a heel of the new narrow Cuban variety.

There has always been a great demand for English boots, yet many women could not wear the extremely wide last. This autumn there has appeared the very good boot shown second from the left below, which looks more feminine than the English boot, and is a little less broad and a trifle less flat. It has all the earmarks of English style, however, and may be had in tan or black calfskin with leather laces.

WHAT A YOUNG GIRL WEARS

Serge Frocks, Which Never Find a Worthy Successor in the School Wardrobe, and Their Compatriots, Flexible-brimmed Sailors, Overflow the Autumn Shops

Soft plaid, known since time immemorial as part and parcel of the school wardrobe, combined with blue serge. Price, $14.50

SOME of the young women's and girls' frocks shown in the shops this autumn are as attractive as they can be, and although they preserve the general air of simplicity so necessary to the successful costuming of young girls, they nevertheless manage to introduce many of the prettiest of the new fashion ideas. The full skirt sponsored by Chéruit and other French designers seems eminently suited to youthful styles, as does also the simple, loose fitting blouse.

FIRST IN THE SCHOOLGIRL'S WARDROBE

While there are many new materials, there is not now, and never has been, one to replace the reliable blue serge which is so well suited to school frocks. The three dresses illustrated on this page are of serge, wholly or in part. The charming little plaited model sketched at the upper right is of blue serge with a black satin sash and a handkerchief linen chemisette. The plaited skirt falls from a hip-yoke, and the bodice, which is delightfully simple, is especially pretty in the details of the fastening and the fashionable, long, tight sleeves.

almost any age from eight to eighteen. The hat of dark green velvet tones with the brilliant coloring of the silk apples in the front. Narrow black moire ribbon encircles the crown and is tied in a wisp of a bow in the back. This model, like all of those described here, may be had in black or any of the popular colors of the season.

SPLASHES OF AUTUMN COLOR

The frock at the right at the bottom of the page is also of blue serge. The originally designed skirt is shirred in front and has two tucks on the little underskirt. Black satin forms the collar and cuffs, and a little chemisette of batiste gives the essential bit of white at the neck.

The dress illustrated at the upper left is most youthful in its combination of green plaid worsted and plain blue serge. Certain attractive details make up a great part of the charm of the dress. Plaits are carefully arranged both in the

Over a slim sheath of flesh pink satin is slipped a somber covering of black chiffon, delicately perforated with gold beads and weighted at neck and hem with a simply wrought design in black and gold beads. Through this enrichment runs a tracery of turquoise beads, and this brighter coloring the girdle, heavy and deeply tasseled, chooses as the note to accent. About the feet the underslip breaks into a foam of lace against the background of pale pink satin.

Simple to childishness, despite its hybrid origin,—classic from bust to shoulder, "moyen âge" from bust to hips, and nineteenth century from hips to ankles,—is a dress of black net over a slip of black satin, one as full as the other. The bodice, free of the skirt from shoulders to hips, is banded at the neck with a rope of jet, about the arms with fur, and three times at bust, waist, and hips with heavy cordons of jet. But though we attribute its every other grace to some other age, we must grant to the ingenuity of a present-day designer the irregularity of its swinging skirt, long front and back and short at the sides. Gowns from L. P. Hollander & Co.

Of the very essence of coquetry is that gown which demurely draws a kerchief, symbol of all that is Puritan and Quakerish in dress, across the shoulders only to let it slip quite beyond the rescue of strands of rhinestones. A train of the pink faille, silver brocaded, which composes the frock, is attached at the waist but immediately severing connection with the too, too short skirt, falls free to the ground. A pink rose, dripping rhinestones and rosy beads, tips the corsage.

AND WHAT OF SKIRTS? HERE ARE FULL ONES—THEY'RE FOR NOVELTY AND THAT OLD, OLD MODESTY THAT BLUSHED WHEN THEY DEPARTED; AND HERE ARE TUNICS—THEY'RE FOR FULNESS IN ONE PLACE AND SLIMNESS IN ANOTHER; AND HERE ARE SKIRTS WITH THE FRONTS OF THEM SHORT AND THE BACKS OF THEM LONG—THEY'RE FOR INSTANCE

BEGINNING the MODE in the WAY IT SHOULD GO

THE distinctly new features in Bernard's charming models are strongly emphasized. The skirts of all gowns emanating from this house are short, to an astonishing degree, but the collars are high enough to make up for the nether deficiency. Street skirts are from three to six inches off the ground and dancing frocks are even shorter; some of them clear the floor by quite eight inches. Shirrings abound in all the skirts, but a preference is shown for a mass of fulness on the hips while a flat width, front and back, hangs straight from belt to hem. Some of the velvet skirts are slightly shirred all the way around the waist and many are quite elaborate as to trimming. Stitched bands with fancy buttons, clusters of shirrings or box plaits, and yokes with gathered sections are a few of the varieties.

Black velvet is essentially chic, either alone or combined with a black and white checked velvet and fur. Fur is seen on almost every gown this season, and it appears in the most unexpected places; armholes and elbows are outlined with it, jackets are bordered with it, tunics are bound with it, and practically every jacket and dress shown is collared and cuffed with it. No narrow bands of fur are being used, however; the narrowest fur trimming is three inches wide, while the widest is six, and even eight, inches in width.

The choice of fur is a matter for great discrimination as certain materials lose their éclat when used with certain furs.

Bernard employs ermine, otter, castor, monkey fur, black fox, and marmot; an imitation castor known as "nutriace" is being used on quite a number of models.

BERNARD'S TRIMMINGS

Dancing frocks are rather narrower at the hem than the street dresses. Cloth of gold and silver, and velvet of a clinging suppleness are the chosen fabrics, and metal laces, iridescent beads, and metal flowers are the trimmings seen on the evening gowns designed by Bernard. A lovely evening wrap called "Messaline" is of sapphire velvet, silver embroidery, and chinchilla. A bolero of chinchilla, which reaches below the waist in the back and slopes up to form a wide yoke in the front, gives the dominant line to the garment. The velvet is shirred to the chinchilla with a heading two inches wide, and the wrap trails about six inches on the floor in the back and is fully twelve inches shorter in the front. The sleeves are of chinchilla and two long scarf-ends of the fur, lined with blue satin, are carelessly crossed at the neck and thrown over the shoulders.

A three-piece costume of champagne cashmere, called "Gambetta," is illustrated at the left on this page. The underskirt has narrow side plaits, pressed but not stitched, and one three-inch box plait on each hip. An apron-like tunic with a band of otter about three inches above the hem extends across the front and sides of the skirt and joins two long straight widths of the cashmere that hang down the back. The blouse buttons down the left side of the front under four crocheted buttons, and bands of silk embroidery that simulate braided frogs extend from under the buttons upon the cashmere. A narrow band of silk embroidery outlines the neck and wrists, and a tiny yoke of cream chiffon shows above the embroidery at the neck.

The short jacket has a high tight collar of otter and the entire garment is outlined with bands of the same fur; even the armholes and pockets are bordered with the otter.

"JARGOVY"

A gown of blue serge trimmed with bands of silver embroidery on bands of the serge, is sketched at the right on this page and is given the name "Jargovy." The underskirt is formed entirely of narrow box plaits, pressed but not stitched, and an overskirt on the order of the polonaise comes to within six inches of the

Flinging defiance in the teeth of disaster, Paris declares she will not be skimpy; the velvet coat and the skirt as well, are shirred, and fur is used with a lavish hand

COAT COLLARED AND CUFFED WITH WHITE
DRIFTS OF ERMINE—TWO WRAPS OF BREITSCHWANZ PROVE THAT BABY LAMB
BY ANY OTHER NAME IS JUST AS SMART

A coat and muff of breitschwanz prove that baby lamb by any other name would be popular. The short coat has a set-in vest of the fur and collar and cuffs of white ermine. The bolster-shaped muff is of considerable length and is soft and full. A little pyramid hat of black taffeta with two short switchy feathers growing out of it tops the coat

Extravagance becomes economy (mooted war-time word) when a coat of astrakhan that is smart for afternoon is smart for evening too. Tailless ermine makes soft white drifts of the collar and cuffs and the flare begun at the shoulders by raglan sleeves widens until the wrap falls in folds around the bottom

Adept in making overtures to two fashions with the same wrap is the cape-coat which finds an exponent in the breitschwanz model at the upper right. The circular folds of the back, though hanging below the knees, offer little real protection, and the collar, faced with ermine, stops just short of affording warmth to afford instead the proper flare

The tunic of yesterday is in retreat, so far, at least, as this Drécoll model is concerned; all that remains of it is a piece scarce larger than a chafing-dish apron, and that hung at the back. A broad band of dark blue ribbon crosses the front of the blouse of white crêpe metror like military insignia; the buttoned cuffs and the original girdle show details of designing piquantly and undeniably French

Whether inspired by the shadow which the great war cast before it, or whether created at the spur of the conflict itself, the Buzenet suit in the oval is so uncompromisingly military that but to look at it is to stand at attention. The collar and cuffs are of otter. Instead of avoiding the appearance of breaking the law the "tête de nègre" hat is trimmed with feathers as much like aigrets as French art can manufacture

Not quite the courage of its convictions has this Buzenet suit of checked zibeline; though it subscribes to the cult of the uneven hem, it temporizes by dropping a circular flounce at the front and sides. A clever bit of tailoring is in the seaming of the coat bolero-wise. Every little bit on the brim of a hat helps this season and the sailor of corbeau velvet shown goes to great widths to prove its entire popularity

ONE of the most healthy symptoms of the American drama at the present moment is the eagerness displayed by several of our native playwrights to undertake experiments in defiance of many technical traditions. The immediate motive of these experiments is, of course, the desire to attain a sudden and decisive success by capturing the public by surprise. Some of the devices that have been invented to achieve this purpose have no merit but their novelty, and will be discarded as suddenly as they were taken up; but other devices have proved themselves so valuable that they seem destined to be adopted as permanent additions to the technique of the theatre. Any invention that really broadens the boundaries of stage-craft is a boon to future dramatists, and the campaign of technical experiment which is being waged at present with great vigor and audacity is, therefore, strongly to be welcomed.

With his melodrama called "On Trial," Mr. Elmer L. Reizenstein succeeded in overturning the tradition that the incidents of a dramatic plot must be set forth in chronological succession. The popular reception of this play has made it plain that any playwright may henceforward safely venture to reveal a story backward, whenever, by so doing, he can increase the suspense and the intensity of his narrative. It is strongly to be hoped that this new device will not be speedily abused. It is so valuable an addition to the technique of the drama that it would be a great pity if injudicious playwrights should run it into the ground. It remains as true as ever that the great majority of dramatic stories may be set forth most effectively by the traditional method of building forward from causes to effects. But for that other type of story that can be set forth most effectively by delving backward from effects to causes, the formula devised by Mr. Reizenstein should be of great advantage to future playwrights. Mr. Roi Cooper Megrue, who has shown considerable technical cleverness in his two plays, "Under Cover" and "It Pays to Advertise," has apparently determined to overturn another of the traditions of the theatre,—the tradition, namely, that a dramatist must never deceive his audience. It has always been understood that, in the theatre, the emotion of surprise is less impressive than the emotion of recognition; and since this principle is a matter of psychology, there is no prospect of its ever being altered. It remained, however, to be discovered by experiment whether a series of surprises in the mood of farce might not add to the interest of a play in which the emotion of recognition could not, in any case, be strongly stimulated.

In "Under Cover," Mr. Megrue has tried the experiment of deceiving the audience in regard to the hero's character until the very final moment of the play; and, in the preceding issue of this magazine, various reasons were set forth to indicate that the play lost more than it gained by this defiance of tradition. The important point to be observed at present is that the deception which Mr. Megrue has practised on his audience makes it impossible for the audience to take as serious an interest in the fortunes of the hero as his adventures might otherwise have awakened. It is psychologically impossible to trifle with an audience, and subsequently to stimulate it to a serious reaction.

"It Pays to Advertise" is full of surprises. Time and time again, the audience is permitted to form one opinion of

Sometimes the course of the true love in "The Beautiful Adventure," in which Mrs. Thomas Whiffen and Ann Murdock play, merely bubbles over pebbles and sometimes it surges into a boulder; but smooth or ruffled, it is ineffably sweet the motives of the characters in a certain scene, only to have that opinion suddenly overturned by a subsequent revelation that the characters were merely acting to deceive each other. The play, however, is not a melodrama, but a farce; and if these surprises are welcomed by the audience, it is because nothing serious is at stake. The fact that this formula has proved itself successful in the present piece should by no means be accepted as an indication that it would also be successful if it were employed in a serious play.

"IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE"

THE subject-matter of "It Pays to Advertise," which was written by Mr. Megrue in collaboration with Mr. Walter Hackett, is somewhat reminiscent of George Ade's "Just Out of College" and of several other plays; but this subject-matter has been handled with such verve and vigor and such a humorous accentuation of the unexpected that the farce deserves the warm welcome that has been accorded to it.

The hero is the son of a millionaire soap-manufacturer. To prove that he is not as unpractical as his father thinks him, he sets out to defeat his parent in a business campaign. He expends all the capital that he can beg or borrow in advertising a new brand of soap. His advertising is so successful that he soon finds himself besieged with orders for a hypothetical product that he is utterly unprepared to manufacture. But the demand he has created is so great that his father is obliged to go into partnership with him to furnish the supply.

This story of business methods in America is told with real richness of American humor. The dialogue is genuinely funny, and the many surprises of the plot are so deftly manipulated that the audience is kept continually in an attitude of alertness. The characters are truthfully conceived and admirably acted. An air of actuality is afforded to the whole proceeding by the accurate statistics of advertising that are bandied about in the dialogue. All in all, this farce might be recommended without hesitation to any visitor from abroad as a typical example of the current product of our native humor.

"INNOCENT"

BEFORE "Innocent" was produced in New York, there were rumors that this Hungarian play by Arpad Pasztor,

Delightful "Miss Daisy" receives at the Shubert Theatre each evening with a coterie of debonair dancers who charm the audience with all manner of quips and cranks and wanton wiles, which culminate in a pierrot dance by John Boyle, Claiborne Foster, Allen Kearns, and Elsie Hitz which was first produced in Budapest in 1910 and which is now disclosed in an adaptation by George Broadhurst, was constructed backward like "On Trial"; but these rumors appear to have been without foundation.

"Innocent" begins with a prologue in which a man commits suicide, leaving behind a written record of his life which he wishes to be read by his nearest friend. As the friend begins to read this record, the lights are lowered, and we are made to witness a three-act play which incorporates the incidents that are set forth in the dead man's diary.

This play takes place two years before the prologue; but the play itself, from the outset to the end, is constructed forward through time and is built up, in the traditional manner, from causes to effects. It is apparent, therefore, that the Hungarian author missed, by ever so little, an opportunity to reap the advantage of revealing his entire story backward, from effects to causes. He trembled on the verge of an invention, but he failed to take the decisive step by which Mr. Reizenstein moved forward to the creation of a precedent.

The only technical purpose that is served by the prologue of "Innocent" is to inform the audience in advance that the play itself is doomed to have a tragic termination. But the traditional manner of conveying such an intimation is much more effective than this novel subterfuge. All the great tragic dramatists from Aeschylus to Ibsen have managed to convey a sense of impending and inevitable doom by the literary tone of the dialogue in the initial moments of their plays; and the present device must be regarded, therefore, merely as a confession of literary weakness.

The play itself is unsatisfactory. It has a great theme, but this theme is not greatly handled. It exhibits a young woman who is doomed by hereditary influences to ruin herself and every one who comes into contact with her. Upon the death of her parents, she is consigned to the guardianship of a friend of her father's, who accepts with many misgivings the responsibility that has been thrust upon him. Before long, she seduces her unwilling guardian, and, as time goes on, she ruins him completely.

It is for this reason that he ultimately kills himself, under the circumstances that have been set forth in the prologue.

There is a note of unreality in all the characters of "Innocent" which indicates that the Hungarian author was not entirely equal to the difficult task with which he found himself confronted. Furthermore, the dialogue of Mr. Broadhurst's version is stilted and rhetorical. A play that, in its theme, is rather sordid is made to seem more so when it is constructed and written with an air of artificiality. There is only one excuse for being unpleasant in the theatre, and that is to be real.

"THE BLUDGEON"

"THE BLUDGEON" was a good play when it was originally written by August Strindberg, with the title of "The Father"; for then its absolute reality redeemed its sordidness of theme. But, as rewritten by Mr. Paul Armstrong and presented as a new American drama, it seems unnecessarily unpleasant. The moral horrors it sets forth are not sufficiently veracious to warrant the public to

If any sober-minded person should object that the costumes for "Sari" are far-fetched, one may retort that they are meant to be; a designer was sent as far as Vienna and Paris for the express purpose of fetching them. She went farther than that, however—she took an extensive journey into the mountain peaks of her fertile imagination. They will serve as a splendid background for Mizzi Hajos and Irene Pauloska when "Sari" reopens its New York season in December

THE SPELL OF JAPAN, by ISABEL ANDERSON, will probably have its own distinctive place in the "series" to which it belongs, because of the peculiar advantages enjoyed by the author for seeing what is of especial interest in the land described. Mrs. Anderson is the wife of Larz Anderson, whom Mr. Taft promoted from the post of minister to heroic little Belgium to that of ambassador to her oriental ally in the present vast war of nations. Mr. Anderson's qualifications for diplomacy were acquired not so much in his country's service abroad, as through the intimacy of social life in the official set of Washington, where he and Mrs. Anderson dispensed a lavish hospitality in their huge and beautiful house.

Mrs. Anderson had seen Japan before she went thither as the wife of the ambassador, and had known something of court official life in the empire of the Mikado. In her book, she tells without pretense or undue elation of the flattering courtesies received by herself and the ambassador from the hands of the highest in the land, while she finds space also to tell of her contact with the plain people, with the shops, streets, and every-day life of the Japanese. She is clearly sympathetic with Japan in its resentment against the attitude of California. With tactful reticence, however, she forbears to express herself strongly upon this subject. She describes with a minutia that is not tedious the ceremonies of Japanese hospitality at the imperial palace and in other high quarters. Her account of the geisha dances is delightfully given, and she manages to convey her own lively impression of charming scenes in the streets and gardens of the capital. To one of the attachés of the embassy she owes material for an interesting chapter on bear hunting with the Ainos.

The art and the literature of Japan receive due, though, of course, not exhaustive notice. There are some amusing examples of Japanese English; some of the literal translations of Japanese invitations, and the like, are most entertaining. The best illustrations of Mrs. Anderson's book are made from exquisite photographs evidently done by skilled native photographers. A few of the colored plates are also pleasing, though several are far from successful. The copy of Miss Hyde's engraving, given above, is delightful. (Boston: The Page Company. $2.50 net.)

EGYPT (LA MORT DE PHILÆ), by PIERRE LOTI, has been ably translated by W. P. Baines, and the present volume makes some approach to conveying to the reader of English the rare and elusive charm of the French sailor's style. Indeed, Mr. Baines, if it may be assumed that the translator is a man, has achieved a highly difficult task in preserving so much of the original without importing into his translation aught of the alien idiom. The French of Loti is here put into a sound and properly rhythmic English prose, so that the whole reads as if it had originally been written in English. As usual, Loti is concerned first of all for the beauty and serenity of what is old, what is oriental, and what is Moslem. One learns nothing useful from these delicious pages, but the imaginative reader with leisure to bestow upon them and a willingness to enjoy them deliberately, as he would a sunset, the mystery of a moonlight night, or the glory of the sapphire sky and perfumed air of the American late August or early September, is likely to find the book one "to have and to hold" for reading and rereading.

Loti treats his subject in twenty rather short chapters, the longest easily read with care and a tasting of the style in a little more than half an hour. The volume opens happily with an impression of "A Winter Midnight before the Great Sphinx." This chapter gives the keynote to the whole book, and few who read it with appreciation will be content to leave unread any of what follows. Another notable after-dark chapter is that dealing with "Thebes by Night." One of the most delicious chapters is that dealing with the "Mosques of Cairo." It recalls passages in Loti's delightful book, "The Disenchanted." The noisy tourist is, of course, a nuisance in places of beauty and of solemn historic interest, but Loti exhibits a sort of intellectual snobbery in his frequent impatient references to these objectionable folk. Perhaps he would not have been so severe upon British maiden ladies of uncertain years had he suspected the part that Great Britain was to play in the present world-war. veloping a home for the spring months in the environs of Fiesole. There is a general agreement that the hill towns of Tuscany are among the most fascinating places on earth, not only for climate and scenery, but by reason of the inhabitants and their social customs. This truth Mr. Lucas discovered, and he presents it convincingly in his delightful book, along with pictures that help the conviction. The frontispiece is a thing to make one hunger for rural Italy. THE GREAT AND NEAR GREAT by LORD ALFRED DOUGLAS, restirs the most unsavory subject in British literary annals, and for such disturbance of the sleeping muck, the author finds excuse in a recent attempt to revive the old scandal in its worst form as regards himself. He was entirely justified in a self-defensive publication, and few candid readers can fail to be impressed with the frank tone of his book, but there are a good many things that he might well have omitted, among others the caricatures of Wilde and Lord Alfred, a very charming sketch portrait of himself in youth, and the pictures of his wife and his son. He might wisely have omitted, also, some of the unkind things he says of the wretched Wilde, as savoring of revenge, for, after all, the primary reason for the publication of this book lies in the fact that the author discovered recently that Wilde, to whom he clung through life, and whose burial expenses he paid, had made a savage attack upon him in unpublished portions of "De Profundis." Lord Alfred owns, also, that his genuinely beautiful sonnet on Wilde, written as if in premonition of his death, is essentially insincere, since Lord Alfred had long recognized the factitious quality of Wilde's literary fame, and the cheapness as well as the vileness of the man's character.

The use of the photograph of Lord Alfred as a youth at Oxford is a justifiable piece of evidence as showing how much of a child, a disingenuous and charming child, he was when he first met Wilde, and, perhaps, the frontispiece, showing Lord Alfred to-day as a man of mature and dignified countenance, properly furnishes also the needed contrast. Lord Alfred has suffered much from his relations with Wilde, and it is easy to believe that he has suffered unjustly, but his sufferings, if one may judge from some of the text and several of the illustrations in this volume, have not enabled him to condemn notoriety, of which one would think he had had quite as much as a sane man could desire. Incidentally, he has given us an undeniably interesting and extremely well-written book, with an estimate of Wilde as a man of letters that should help to silence those who for reasons of their own are trying to make him out an important figure. (New York: Duffield & Company. $2.50 net.)

JOSEPH PULITZER, REMINISCENCES OF A SECRETARY, by ALLEYNE IRELAND, recounts the author's impressions of his employer during a service of considerable length. The world already knows that Mr. Pulitzer was an extraordinary man, but, perhaps, few persons will read Mr. Ireland's impressions without amazement at the variety of ways in which Mr. Pulitzer was extraordinary. When Mr. Ireland took service with his employer he was a blind man of vast wealth, broken health, irascible temper, but unimpaired memory, astonishing acquirements, rare energy, and keen mentality. He lived in splendor, with several luxurious residences, a corps of servants, and half a dozen secretaries, and the like.

Mr. Ireland was much of the time with Mr. Pulitzer on a yacht in European waters, and here Mr. Pulitzer managed by the aid of secretaries and readers to keep in touch with his own newspaper, with the condition of rival journals, and with the periodical and other literature of the time. Although the blind man seems to have tried hard to control his irascibility, to have had his times of geniality, and to have been sincerely anxious to spare his secretaries the annoyances and humiliations to which he frequently subjected them, the story of their ordeal is almost unbelievable. His effort was to obtain for the unusual services he demanded men whose rare qualities fitted them for the work, but his nervous irritability, and especially his sensitiveness to noise, made him much of the time a terrible taskmaster. In spite of the really affectionate tone that Mr. Ireland gives his reminiscences, most self-respecting readers will conjecture curiously how vast was the salary that could reconcile a man to such a service, and one can but feel that his ability to write of his employment

PATTERN SERVICE

No. 2685/20

Not to be dismissed by a glance are clever details of tailoring such as the buttoned belt and cuffs and the box plaits in the back

THE designs illustrated on this page are among those which have proved themselves to be the specially favored few. They are simple, little trimmed, with unbroken lines, and with the distinction which means careful attention to all three of these requisites. Because of this the designs shown here may be called typical Vogue designs. Especially are the patterns for the costumes shown at the bottom of the page valuable, for they give versions of the frock in the one-piece effect which was such a noticeable feature of the autumn openings in Paris.

No. 2686/20

Fastened up to the neck and down to the wrists to set a new fashion in waists is this blouse

No. 2614/20

Set-in panels of soft Georgette crêpe add novelty to the lines of this pretty satin blouse

No. 2768/20

Ivory toned satin finished with narrow white silk braid—for Paris has declared in favor of braid trimming—launders well

No. 2483/20

Beads and paillettes are to have their day, and tiny beaded motifs on a satin blouse are a chic touch

Nos. 2693/20-2694/20

Becoming either to the slight or to the fairly plump figure is a frock with a deep surplice front

Nos. 2610/20-2620/20 Suited to the slim girlish figure is a dress with a ruffled peplum

No. 2772/20

As high as to collar and as short as to skirt as the newest Paris models

Nos. 2676/20-2677/20 Suited to a figure slim and svelty is this hip-length belted bodice

Nos. 2678/20-2679/20

Adjusted to the figure rather than suggesting the restraint of being fitted is this long bodice

The patterns illustrated on this page, sizes 34 to 40 inches bust measure, 24 to 30 inches waist measure, and 35 to 41 inches hip measure, are 50 cents each for waist or skirt, or $1 for complete costume. One-piece frock No. 2772/20 is $1. An illustration, material requirements, and directions are given with each pattern. Nos. 2762/20-2763/20

A jaunty little blouse of serge with a square neck and military looking rows of buttons is here worn with a full deeply plaited skirt

Nos. 2734/20-2735/20
Nothing daunted by fashion's change of front, a tight skirt here serves as foundation for a very full one

Nos. 2736/20-2737/20
Coat-frocks such as this, of gabardine or serge, are beginning to be successful rivals of light-weight suits

Nos. 2766/20-2767/20
Having played up to fashion by plaits in the underskirt the tunic may be as plain as ever it will

Nos. 2760/20-2761/20
Fulness over the hips and flatness across the front and back, as in this model, were characteristics of the skirts featured at the openings

Nos. 2724/20-2725/20
An afternoon gown of satin veiled with chiffon or voile affords an opportunity to take advantage of the marked fad for fur trimmings

Nos. 2718/20-2719/20

Tassels of metal thread and collar and cuffs of the new crêpe "français," which is so sheer and fine, are telling details of this frock

Nos. 2732/20-2733/20
Beyond peradventure of a doubt, a frock with buttoned sleeves and a skirt helped to flare by tucks is of the new autumn season bone buttons as the only trimming. In Nos. 2734/20-2735/20 is given a gathered full-length overskirt which may be trimmed either with bias folds of the material of the underskirt or with wide velvet ribbon. Voile over satin will be found to be most serviceable and smart for this model. Nos. 2760/20-2761/20 show the skirt model launched by Callot, which has a great deal of fulness over the hips but leaves the front and back plain. This model evidences the marked military effect which is noticeable in many of the gowns this season. Nos. 2724/20-2725/20 show a smart afternoon dress.

Entirely innocent of sleeves, of course, and with a bodice merely swathed about the figure

BROCADES glistening with silver or gold thread and chiffon or net weighted with pailletted designs are the materials used for the dance frocks and the evening gowns of this season. For the evening wraps brocaded silk, velvet, velours, faille, and old-fashioned bengaline are seen lined with silver or gold tissue. When the wrap is fur trimmed, the bands are wide and the collar is high and enormous; in fact, the wraps of the winter are most luxurious and becoming, and, more to the point, perhaps, they are really warm and are long enough to protect a light gown.

No. 2769/20 makes a lovely background for any filmy evening gown. The band of fur about the bottom, which is broad enough to satisfy the most persistent demands of the mode, adds an air of sumptuousness, and the long tassels drooping down the back afford an opportunity for a glint of gold or a definite bit of contrasting color of some other tint. Nos. 2687/20-2688/20 form a naive little dance frock, with the skirt ruffles edged in turn by other ruffles. There is not a sign of a sleeve, an omission much noticed in most of the evening models of the Paris openings.

No. 2769/20
Becoming as a background for any light toned gown is a great cape richly banded with fur and with tassels adangle

THE EVER-PRESENT SEPARATE BLOUSE AND A TRIO OF VELVET JACKETS TO WEAR OVER IT

No. 2784/20

Distinctly military is this double-breasted, high-collared blouse, which is most successful in ivory satin with ball buttons covered with the satin

No. 2596/20

Paris has launched the separate surplice bodice of this type and develops it in velvet or taffeta

No. 2373/20

Double cuff, collar closely fitted in back, and shoulder yoke are featured in this pretty waist

No. 2786/20

Copied line for line—high collar, tight sleeves, and all—from a French blouse noted for its charming simplicity is this semifitted model

THE separate blouse for the winter is smartest when made of satin or velvet, but transparent materials such as Georgette crêpe or chiffon will be much used. If transparent blouses are worn a jacket of velvet or satin makes a charming addition to the wardrobe. No. 2559/20 is especially attractive if made of velvet in one of the live blue shades and worn over a bodice of blue chiffon made over a flesh colored material. The buttons may be of lapis lazuli set in dull silver. No. 2561/20 is a charming little draped affair made of satin and lined with a contrasting color. In black satin, lined with white and worn over a white chiffon blouse, this jacket is most effective. No. 2785/20 and No. 2680/20 make serviceable additions to the winter wardrobe. These models may be made of velvet, satin, or serge, and when worn with a skirt of

As charming as lines both novel and simple can make a blouse is this

No. 2559/20

The extra jacket of velvet over a chiffon or satin blouse is an accepted style. Pattern includes both matching or contrasting material they give the effect of a whole costume. No. 2596/20 lends itself to the fashion recently launched in Paris of a surplice bodice of velvet or taffeta worn over a dark satin skirt; Drécoll showed a flamboyant colored velvet bodice topping a dark blue taffeta skirt. No. 2519/20 is charming made of striped satin or crêpe; the waistcoat may be made with the stripes running crosswise. The roll collar should be of crêpe français, or Georgette crêpe, or organdy.

The patterns illustrated on this page, sizes 34 to 40 inches bust measure, are priced 50 cents each. No. 2559/20 and No. 2561/20 include a jacket and blouse pattern for 50 cents. An illustration, directions, and material requirements are given with each pattern. Order from Vogue Pattern Service, 443 Fourth Avenue, cor. 30th Street, New York City

No. 2556/20

The suit material may be introduced in the back panel and in the pointed cuffs of a blouse of transparent material

No. 2484/20

Tub satin in ivory white might well be chosen for this blouse with the seams hemstitched to mark the line of the yoke

No. 2680/20

When a long semifitted coat-blouse is worn over a flaring separate skirt, a smart afternoon costume is the result

No. 2282/20

In this case, either satin or velvet is smart and practical as well, when worn over a skirt of self or contrasting material

No. 2561/20

Satin lends itself admirably to the fashioning of this jacket, which may be lined with contrasting material

NEW ARE ESSENTIALS OF EVERY WARDROBE

Nos. 2683/20-2684/20

A simple blouse is modish by virtue of a collar which, after the new fashion, fits close in the back. Yoke and plaited panel mark the skirt

ACCESSORIES such as collar, sleeves, or waistcoat added to a costume may bring it up to the latest fancy of the mode. The addition of new sleeves means a slight alteration in a frock, but the effect may be changed entirely thereby. A collar

Patterns of skirts and blouses illustrated on this page, in the sizes 34 to 40 inches bust measure, 24 to 30 inches waist measure, and 35 to 41 inches hip measure, are priced at 50 cents each or $1 for the complete costume. The following patterns are priced at 50 cents each—No. 2705/20 which includes two new waistcoat designs; No. 2704/20, which includes patterns of six sleeves; No. 2629/20, which includes the patterns of two tunics; and No. 2649/20, in which are patterns for five collars. Order from Vogue Pattern Service, 443 Fourth Avenue, corner 30th Street, New York City

Sizes 2 to 8 years
In black velveteen with hand-hemstitched ruffles of fine batiste, this suit is a delightful garb for any dress-up occasion

No. 2643/20
Sizes 2 to 8 years
Trousers in dark linen, with collar and cuffs of the blouse to match, make this suit quite as practical as it is comfortable

FROCKS OF UTILITY FOR THE LITTLE GIRL OF KINDERGARTEN AGE

CHILDREN'S clothes must be serviceable above all else, so the designs must be appropriate for serviceable materials and so planned that they may be laundered easily and will not pull out of shape in the process. All these considerations have been observed in the designs illustrated on this page. The little girl's frock of pattern No. 2645/20 may be unbuttoned from top to bottom so that it may be laid flat for ironing, and the cuffs and collar are both detachable so that they may be freshened without laundering the frock. No. 2182/20 is charmingly simple and practical, and has only a tiny yoke effect of smocking for trimming. A pretty idea is to smock with thread of a different color from the frock and to make the cuffs and collar of batiste to match the thread. An excellent-three piece suit for a boy is No. 2644/20, which is equally suited to serge, flannel, corduroy, or linen.

A new version of the useful sailor blouse is found in 2643/20. This suit is cut with a shield which is buttoned to the collar. To make the trousers of dark linen with the collar and cuffs of the blouse to match, renders the suit both practical and attractive.

The patterns illustrated on this page, sizes given under each illustration, cost 50 cents each. Order from Vogue Pattern Service, 443 Fourth Ave., cor. 30th St., N.Y.

No. 2522/20
Designs for two garments to be worn under the corset are included in this pattern, priced at 50 cents

No. 2010/20
A princess combination, when it has as few seams as this one, is extremely easy to make and to iron

No. 2608/20
Grace, softness, and comfort unite in a draped negligée which may be trimmed with short fringe

LINGERIE WHICH PROVIDES DAIN- TI-NESS AND COMFORT BY DAY AND NIGHT

EACH garment shown on this page has a distinctive feature for which it has been selected and by which it claims favor. The graceful, slim lines and the ease with which it may be made are features of the combination No. 2586/20. The top finished by a simple band held by a ribbon is unusual and practical.

No. 2595/20 has been designed to obviate the tearing of the nightgown at the under-arm, which is a defect of the kimono-cut gown. In this design, the broad lace band which trims the top is extended to form the under sleeve and a square cap makes the upper sleeve. Clusters of tucks through which a ribbon is run add to the daintiness of the garment. An entirely new model for a nightgown is shown in No. 2703/20. A cluster of tucks is run around the figure just below the arms, and over the bust their fulness

In this pattern of a long negligée, the designer has cleverly achieved a model artistically draped, which even the amateur may develop successfully

No. 2701/20
The popular surplice cut is exemplified in a negligée trimmed with shirred corded ruffles of the material, and fastened with a jeweled button behind is freed. The gown opens in front and is fastened by ribbon bows.

The simple cut of No. 2581/20 recommends it at once. The four tucks running lengthwise make this brassière fit perfectly and the one-button fastening in back is simplicity itself. No. 2582/20 is a well-fitting surplice brassière, which is cut low so that it may be worn under a low bodice. It is a model suited to the average figure.

A version of the envelope chemise that may be worn under or over the corset is No. 2523/20. This has ribbon straps that are easily adjusted for wear under an evening bodice.

No. 2701/20 is a new and altogether charming negligée. This model is cut with a defined waist-line and has a full circular skirt attached under the surplice girdele fastening. A full double ruffle forms the trimming and the surplice bodice is both new and pleasing.

No. 2587/20
The transparent cuff, surplice sash, and circular skirt piece of this short negligée make it a model well worth consideration

No. 2595/20
A nightgown claims indestructibility by reason of a straight top band which continues under the arm and prevents any tearing

Patterns illustrated on this page, sizes 34 to 40 inches bust measure, are priced at 50 cents each, except No. 2526/20, No. 2701/20, and No. 2608/20, which are priced at $1 each. EIGHT WAYS to MAKE a SUIT

With a Scope for Selection Which Embraces Skirts Wide and Less Wide, Coats Long and Short, and Collars High and Low, the Woman Choosing the Model for a Suit Is Restricted in But One Particular—Sleeves Must Inevitably Be Long and Very Closely Fitted

Nos. 2660/20-2661/20
High collar, fitted raglan sleeve, and flared coat proclaim this suit new

Nos. 2742/20-2743/20
Side plaits held in place by buttoned tabs are used in panel form both in the coat and in the full skirt

Nos. 2754/20-2755/20
Cut circular are both the skirt of the coat and the skirt proper. Sleeves are frankly tight fitting

Nos. 2770/20-2771/20
The redingote worn over a skirt hung on an approved hip yoke and finished with an upstanding frill

Nos. 2746/20-2747/20
A distinctly military effect is produced by the high fur collar and by the braid trimming and side fastening

Nos. 2658/20-2659/20
With fulness of coat and skirt fitted in the approved fashion of the season

Nos. 2748/20-2749/20
Distinctly new is the cut of both the coat and the skirt, in which circular fulness forms box plaits

Note: The patterns illustrated on this page are priced 50 cents each for coat or skirt, $1 for the whole costume. Sizes 34 to 40 inches bust measure, 24 to 30 inches waist measure, and 35 to 41 inches hip measure. An illustration, material requirements, and full directions come with each pattern. Order from Vogue Pattern Service, 443 Fourth Avenue, cor. 30th Street, New York City

ALL expectations to the contrary, Paris has given us an entirely new silhouette. This was done by featuring full skirts in either plaited or circular form, topped by coats that were either three-quarter or five-eighth length. The skirts of the mode are cut from two to four yards wide at the hem, and many of them are hung from well fitted yokes. Side plaits and box plaits as well as gathers are features of many of the skirts, while the circular skirt, well fitted to the hip-line, is much in evidence. The sleeves in the day gowns are long and fitted, either set in with a snug armhole or cut raglan or kimono fashion. In the two latter instances they always have a piece inserted beneath the arm to do away with any superfluous fullness there. Many of the collars are high, versions of the military collars in fact, while others are high in back and fit the neck snugly. Such are the fashions featured by Paris, and into the designs illustrated on this page have been incorporated the best of these suggestions.

No. 2660/20 shows the high, tight, straight collar and extremely long, flaring peplum coat. In Nos. 2658/20-2659/20 is illustrated the new tight kimono cut sleeve. In Nos. 2748/20-2749/20 the skirt is tight to the hip-line, where its flare falls into graceful box plaits. Plaited panels both in the coat and skirt of Nos. 2742/20-2743/20, are very cleverly employed in the designing of this model. In Nos. 2754/20-2755/20 the much featured plain, circular skirt is in evidence, and the peplum of the coat is cut sufficiently circular to harmonize with the skirt.

Nos. 2750/20-2751/20
A clever coat fastening, and an equally clever simulated hip yoke on a circular skirt moderately full.

Nos. 2710/20-2711/20
Soft taffeta combined with ruffles of cream lace makes a becoming and practical dance frock

FOR the child's winter coat the material selected should have warmth without weight and wearing qualities unquestioned. Double-faced fabrics as well as tweeds will be found practical for the school or play coat. For afternoon service, and for wear over the party frock, materials such as velveteen, high luster, broadcloth, and velours de laine with a touch of fur added at the collar and cuffs are smart.

Nos. 2712/20-2713/20
Topping a ruffled skirt of taffeta a long-waisted bodice of velvet is worn

Nos. 2714/20-2715/20
Gabardine or serge assures success for this simple but extremely smart frock

No. 2648/20
An extra coat which may be worn for afternoon or evening is a great economy

Nos. 2672/20-2673/20
The plaited peplum, high collar of the coat, and the yoke skirt are of the moment's mode

Materials for the gowns of the young girl from 14 to 18 years of age should be carefully selected so that the cloth or silk will be appropriate for the design upon which the garment is constructed. For the plain school frock or suit, nothing is more appropriate than gabardine or serge. For the frock to be worn to the afternoon dance class velvet or velveteen with a touch of fur is an excellent choice and for the evening taffeta and lace are charming.

No. 2630/20
Sizes 4 to 12 years

nightly. Kipling, by the way, is the only bard missing in the war-ode staff of The Times. But why should he write any new war ballads? He and Shakespeare have already said all the apt things that can be said about an Anglo-Something conflict, and I daresay Mr. Kipling knows it quite well.

Mr. Waller is preceded at the Empire by a score of hard-working vaudevillists who labor in vain to take the mind of the audience off its troubles. A gentleman plays a piano which spins around in the air, like Pegoud looping the loop, with a warbling prima donna poised on top of it all the time; the audience looks on listlessly. An earnest acrobat, eight feet tall and infinitely thin, ties himself into witty knots and swings from bar to bar; deepening apathy on the part of the audience. An imitation Alabama coon tries to imitate Frank Tinney and an American-girl-in-a-taxi sings archly, "Kiss me all along the Strand, In Piccadilly hold my hand," and implores the audience to join in the chorus; nobody joins. Namur has fallen; compulsory enlistment is threatened. England had to go into this war, of course; nevertheless—

"IF YOU CAN KEEP YOUR HEAD"

Then Mr. Waller comes on very gravely, a white carnation, symbol of peace, in his buttonhole. He recites "Snarleyow." The house wakes up; the circle of Nuts standing at the back and along the sides who have been looking on cynically—their high hats well on their heads, cigarettes lazily between their teeth—the Nuts come to life and applaud. Mr. Waller proceeds with his galvanization. He gives "The Ballad of the Camperdown" and "The English Flag"; the house is keen on enlistment now. He recites "If," and when he begins,

"If you can keep your head when all about you are losing theirs, and blaming it on you," one can always hear a pin drop. When he rings out the famous last line, the audience can't hear itself think for the row.

"And what is more, you'll be a man, my son,"

At least it couldn't hear itself think if it were a French or an American audience. It needs a bit getting used to, the Englishman's habit of taking his enthusiasms sadly, but a stranger comes to like it in time. The English are so sincere that when they move an eyelash it means quite as much as when a crowd of Latins throw their arms around a perfect stranger and kiss him on both cheeks.

THE FAMILIAR CUES

With the return of the native English actors to the boards, the old familiar line of the London cues extending from the entrance to the pit of the popular houses came back. The longest and most ardent cue to-day is at His Majesty's, where Louis Parker's "Drake," filled with patriotic color and rhetorical bouquets for the Union Jack, is having a lucrative revival. Sir Beerbohm Tree's production is pictorially impressive. His impersonation of Sir Francis Drake, which he plays with agreeable simplicity and force, touches English pride and English ambition in quite the right spot. Miss Phyllis Neilson-Terry is so convincingly a Queen Elizabeth that one fancies she might have been often to the Abbey and interviewed her Virgin Majesty's ghost.

The Armada play is a tremendous go; a generous percentage of the box-office receipts helps to swell the National Relief Fund.

The actors and actor-managers are meeting the exigencies of war with pluck, playing, most of them, at half-salaries, or at a loss, in order to keep their companies together. Soldiers and nurses in uniform go to all the theatres at half price and there is hardly an audience without the familiar blur of khaki and the severe silhouette of the Red Cross cape. But no matter who it is that has his name in capitals on the program, the real star of the London stage to-day is a stern gentleman by the name of Mars. What with the singing of the French, Russian, Belgian, and English national anthems and the display of pictures of the chiefs of the Entente and the latest maneuvers of their troops, the audience finds itself rising as often at a music-hall as at an intercession service at the Abbey—and with much of the same thrill.

Not all the actors, however, are lucky enough to be engaged to sing "Hearts of Oak" or to recite "Henry the Fifth." Three hundred American actors and actresses who were playing in the theatres throughout Great Britain when the war broke out were left without an engagement and without a farthing for board or for fare home. The United States government has been "lending" them the money for both. The generosity and quick action of the American powers in coming to the rescue of their shipwrecked children over here this summer, was, incidentally, a moving little drama all by itself.

DRAMAS OFF THE STAGE

Several nights ago a mob of people moved across Trafalgar Square toward Pall-Mall. For a moment it was hard to hear what the excitement was. Then an Englishman quietly sauntered up to a group of three other Englishmen, and after a decent pause took his cigarette out of his mouth. "German chap," he said, laconically; "took out a German flag—cheered for the Kaiser—Nelson's Monument, wrong place, y' see. Silly ass." In front of the Carlton the "silly ass" was backed into one of the windows on the Haymarket and protected by some benevolent bobbies who advised the crowd to "get along now, please." One of his silly coat sleeves was missing, his silly collar was gone, his blond Fatherland hair looked as if some one had been impatiently running his fingers through it, his face was flushed, and he looked nervous. Not all the dramas are behind the footlights.

Rotten Row is almost deserted. A few depressed looking military gentlemen beyond the joyful fighting age, a few children, and here and there a lonely woman or two—that's all. The real spectacles in Hyde Park are the troops getting hard drill morning after morning, and the reviews of the First Life Guards and the Royal Horse Guards. These gorgeous creatures gave a particularly successful matinée one day. The Queen sat in a carriage at Albert Gate and watched the squadrons march to quarters while the crowd cheered.

The scarlet and glitter of the Life Guards is the saving note of color in the hordes of khaki-clad chaps in town. They are everywhere, these ominous, neutral toned groups, though their numbers grow smaller every day. Naturally there is an outbreak of khaki colors in the autumn tailored suits. Whipcords of military cut in khaki and similarly dun colored tones are immensely popular and, strange to say, not unbecoming, though, of course, a woman who has a clear color looks the best in them.

INTENSIVE ART

"If Brevity Is the Soul of Wit, Why Not the Soul of Art?" Says the Londoner, and Adopts Miniatures

MINIATURES, little and big, are the fashion in London today. Tiny ones to wear as pendants, or larger ones to stand with delicate china, silver toys, or bibelots in the boudoir, are exhibited everywhere.

Many women like to wear a miniature of a pretty child or of some much prized pet; but the larger miniatures are most charming and decorative when they are copies of some of the old masters such as are to be seen in the National Gallery in London, or in the Louvre.

A FIG FOR MECHANICAL ART

Of course, every one knows that wonderful as mechanically produced pictures are, they do not and can not give the pure coloring and atmosphere that go to make up a great part of the delight of the originals.

People of culture are no longer satisfied with colored prints, even the good ones, good, that is, until they are compared with the originals; they no longer seem the life-like copies one would fain imagine them to be. Nowadays, the person with a cultivated taste wishes to have something done by a real artist; and so, since they are so easily transported and so wholly charming, miniatures of favorite pictures are greatly in demand.

A special trip to the National Gallery on students' day to see these little pictures in the making is well worth while. It was particularly interesting to watch one girl who, a few days ago, was copying "Lady Cockburn and Her Children," a pretty group of a mother with her three little sons tumbling and clambering over her.

On a stool beside the artist was a most lovely thing, a miniature she had just completed of Botticelli's "Virgin and Child with Angels." The whole picture was about two and a half inches across and was encased in a dull, chased gold, circular frame. This miniature was sold to be sent as a first communion present to a young girl—quite a valuable idea, for it is difficult indeed to find suitable confirmation presents.

Another pretty group which lends itself well to copying in miniature is "The Babli Children," painted by Van Dyck in his best period. The three children in the quaint and ornate dress of the Stuart times make a rich bit of coloring. This picture is privately owned, and it is said that it will probably be recalled soon from public view and shut away in some great mansion where only the privileged few will be able to enjoy it; for this reason good copies of it are extremely desirable.

ART TREASURES STILL UNDISCOVERED

To the initiated, visits to the National Gallery on students' days (Thursdays and Fridays) are one of the events of London, for there are always exquisite specimens of finished copies to be seen and intimately examined. The majority of the artists who work upon miniatures at the National Gallery are engaged upon special commissions. Yet, from time to time, a little gem may be picked up at first hand from the artist. It is not only the art students who are working upon students' days but many London artists of reputation. Men and women who ere long will be considered the rising artists of the English school, are to be seen copying pictures on those days; in fact, many private collectors are now making regular visits to the galleries with the object of securing these uncommissioned miniatures. While comparatively few American collectors have as yet adopted this method, a number of members of the social sets of Washington and New York are among the most ardent admirers and patrons of the miniature art.

front and back to give a youthful freedom to the bodice, and the sash helps to break what might be an awkward length to the plaits. The white organdy collar finishes the waist.

The pretty evening wrap sketched on page 64 may be had in any of a number of lovely shades of broadcloth. It has a high deep collar of black velvet and the slits for the hands are outlined by the velvet. The cape is warmly but lightly interlined and is lined with soft white satin. A delicate jet bead cord fastens it at the neck.

Smart for young women or girls is the velvet sailor shown at the left of the group of hats on page 64. A black grosgrain ribbon encircles the edge of the brim and also binds the crown. At the side of the crown is a tiny bow of the new sphinx metallic ribbon. This model is particularly effective in the bright tones that can be worn so well by young girls; a scarlet model is the smartest.

Suitable for girls or young women is the soft-brimmed velvet hat sketched in the middle at the top of page 64. It is bound with selftone grosgrain ribbon. This hat is excellent for school use and is easily packed as it is a soft and flexible shape.

A similar hat is shown at the right in the group of hats sketched on page 64. It also is of velvet and grosgrain ribbon, and has a flexible brim. It is not easy to find hats for young girls and young women, particularly the former, that are both smart and in good taste, but demand, as it usually does, has in this case had a great effect, and the autumn has brought out an acceptable collection of such models at reasonable prices.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

VOGUE invites questions on dress, social conventions, etiquette, entertaining, household decoration, schools, and the shops.

Any reader may have an answer on these and similar topics; Vogue stands ready to fill the rôle of an authoritative, friendly adviser.

Because fashion is so variable, and depends so much on who you are and where you are, it is always better to secure a reliable answer to each problem than to run the risk of making a mistake. Before asking Vogue, please read carefully the following rules:

(1) Addresses of shops where articles mentioned in Vogue may be purchased will be sent by mail without charge and as promptly as possible, provided that a self-addressed, stamped envelope accompanies the request.

(2) Answers to questions of limited length and unlimited as to time of answer will be published in Vogue at its convenience without charge.

(3) Ten-day questions. Answers sent by mail within ten days after receipt. Fee, 25 cents for each question.

(4) Confidential questions. Answers sent by mail within six days after receipt. These answers will not be published without permission. Fee, $2.

(A) The right to decline to answer is in all cases reserved to Vogue.

(B) The writer's full name and address must accompany all questions asked of Vogue.

(C) Self-addressed and stamped envelope must accompany all questions which are to receive answers by mail.

(D) Correspondents will please observe carefully the rule of writing on one side of their letter-paper only.

THE ETIQUETTE OF CALLING

Mrs. J. N. E.—Please inform me as to whether it is proper to call after attending an At Home, an informal tea, or a bridge party. I am a bride, have just moved to a new place, and through friends I have been invited to affairs before the hostesses of several of the functions called upon me.

Ans.—In answer to your request as to the etiquette of making calls, we would say that attending an At Home or a tea is equivalent to a call. A bridge party requires a call afterwards.

Unless the hostess explains why she has not called upon you, it is unusual for her to expect you to accept her invitations. In the case of a very much older woman, however, this ceremony may be waived. There are many reasons why you will have to use your own discretion in such matters, however, as business associations and various other reasons sometimes necessitate one's doing the thing that is not the usual custom.

WRITING AND ANSWERING INVITATIONS

Mrs. L. W. M.—What is the correct form for answering invitations to luncheons and card parties written on visiting cards? It is a familiar rule that the form of the reply should always follow the form of the invitation, but in some cases it seems not to be just correct. I usually answer invitations in the third person on correspondence-cards.

Ans.—We still advise answering an invitation in the same form in which it is issued: in the first or third person.

While it is quite correct for a hostess to use her visiting card to bear a written invitation, it is more courteous of the guest to answer it on note-paper; an acceptance or refusal may always be worded more graciously where there is more space in which to express it. Correspondence-cards are not as much used as the ordinary note-paper.

ANENT COLONIAL COSTUMES

Mrs. R. H. W.—Will you kindly send me descriptions of colonial costumes, both for men and women?

Ans.—A colonial fancy dress has a quilted or brocaded petticoat and a polonaise in a contrasting color made with puffed-up panniers, and it opens over a stomacher. It may have a Watteau plait in the back or may be quite plain. A lace bertha with deep ruffles in the sleeves is a finish to be worn with a high powdered coiffure; the mull fichu with a mob-cap is another style.

A clinging mull frock made with a high-waisted effect (à la Madame Récamier) with strapped slippers, scarf, and reticule, also belongs to the colonial period.

Knee-breeches, silk stockings, buckled shoes, satin coat and waistcoat, choker and lace ruff, and a powdered wig tied in the back with a black ribbon make up the full dress as worn by Washington and his contemporaries. However, by looking up old prints one can, perhaps, find something more becoming and unusual.

SERVING THE GUEST OF HONOR

Mrs. J. W.—Please tell me whether, at an informal dinner, it is correct to serve the hostess first and then the lady at her right?

Ans.—It is quite correct to have the hostess served first, though some people prefer to have the guest of honor served first; both forms are equally correct. It is always less embarrassing for the guest if the hostess cuts into some elaborate dish first; hence the origin of the custom.

BIEN JOLIE
GRECIAN-TRECO

CONVENTIONAL corset designing—to follow imitatively the basic idea of what has been done, and approved—is a relatively simple matter. But to create a new corset, on new lines, out of new material, and have it meet with world-wide acceptance as a necessary development in corset designing, is a rare achievement.

That is what the Bien-Jolie Grecian-Treco accomplished. The prevailing mode made necessary a departure from old standards, for the Greek outline demanded a plastic yet firm support that would preserve the natural grace of the body and yet permit of the greatest measure of comfort.

Because it does this in a distinctive manner, the men and women who design miladi's outer garb have found the Bien-Jolie Grecian-Treco indispensable in fashioning their new creations, and have openly and without reserve indorsed it.

Bien-Jolie Corsets are boned with "Walohn." Every feature of this famous corset must be of highest quality.

ON HER DRESSING-TABLE

NINE TENTHS of the shampoo battle is in the proper drying of the hair. Artificial drying is looked upon with disfavor by many women because they say it makes the hair brittle and lusterless. And this is very often true, but the fault is in the temperature of the air and not in the method of drying employed. To expedite the drying, hot air—not warm air—is frequently used, and therein lies the harm.

One reliable specialist of New York objects to drying with towels, especially those of the rough Turkish variety, because she considers the treatment too rough for the hair; often also, it is only the hair and not the scalp which is dried with towels, and that spells danger. Also the lint comes from towels onto the hair. Where the hair is very dry after the shampoo, a little nourishing coconut oil may be applied to the roots and also to the brittle ends.

On this page is illustrated an improved electric hair dryer by which the temperature of the air can be controlled. It is attached to an electric socket in the usual way, but it is by turning a button that cold air or warm air is turned on. This device is made of nickel, measures about ten inches in length, has several feet of wiring, and costs $12. Though this represents a quick and efficacious way to dry the hair, the occasional sun-bath must not be omitted.

A HANDBOOK ON HAIR

"Hair: Its Nature, Growth, and Most Common Affections, with Hygienic Rules for Its Preservation" is the title, sum, and substance of a book by Dr. Richard Müller, which the well-groomed woman will find interesting. That the hair must be washed occasionally and brushed frequently, and that it has a trying way of falling out, constitutes about all most of us know of this physical part of us. Scattered fragments of advice as to its care we are ever and anon receiving but, judging by the increasing baldness among men and women, they seem to make small impression.

In this book, causes and effects and cures are gathered comprehensively between two convenient covers and she who runs may read. Glancing down the table of contents one sees described "the nature and growth of the hair," which explains the wonder of the growing hair; then "the different forms of baldness" and their treatment; "superfluous hair and its removal"; "parasitical and fungoid diseases"; "hygiene of the hair"; and "on food in general and especially for the growth of the hair." In this last named chapter are given the latest food statistics established under the supervision of a famous Paris dermatologist, who has painstakingly observed that a great number of patients who complain of loss of hair suffer not from scalp diseases but from gastro-intestinal disorders. This points to the need of a good blood supply, and, therefore, this interesting chapter.

In an appendix is described the latest therapeutic measures which have proved to be successful in abating diseases of the scalp, for much has been done in the last few years with electricity.

The greatest specialist in hair diseases, Dr. Sabouraud, of Paris, has given the author permission to employ, by way of illustrations, some of the plates he has made for his own work. This book is published by William R. Jenkins, New York, and costs $1.50.

ARTIFICES OF THE PARISIENNE

A visit was paid a few weeks ago to a woman whose personality, establishment, or preparations, or all three, are favorably known to many readers of Vogue. Summer had effected several changes. The pretty, restful rooms had been redecorated in the yellow, blue, and gold of ducal Venice—gold walls, yellow armure hangings, and blue and gold upholstery. Madame herself had gained in experience—and experiences—though on account of the war she had lost many of the surprises she had planned for her patrons this autumn.

While she was in Paris she visited many of the famous beauty establishments, taking treatments and gathering information; she studied the art and artifices of the Parisienne, intending to bring them back to America, but—woman proposes and the war-god disposes. In Berlin, she was detained three weeks and did her shopping quickly and silently, never omitting to wear, according to military orders, a little identifying American flag pinned to her blouse.

Now she is back in New York with many new ideas, some wonderfully vivid impressions, and a few pretty bottles and trinkets for her salons. She has greater faith than ever in her method of treatment—muscle strapping rather than massage—and in her preparations, nourishing, curative, agreeable, and varied. She lays special stress upon her power to remove blackheads, those persistent disfigurements of the city dweller.

SPONGING ON RUSSIA

When any note of color enters the bathroom decorations it is generally a dull blue or an old-rose. No commendatory word is needed for the well-known, much used, sanitary rubber sponge, but a statement may be made that from Russia has been obtained a shipment of these sponges in an attractive shade of dull blue which may appeal to the possessor of a blue and white bathroom. These sponges, which may be had, also, in the more familiar colors of red, tan, and brown, come in various sizes and vary in price from 25 cents up to $3.50.

Note:—Readers of Vogue inquiring for names of shops where dressing-table articles are purchasable should enclose a stamped and addressed envelope for reply, and state page and date.

But to press the button on this electric hair dryer is to set a halo of warm air radiating about the head

These three bottles contained three of the most popular imported perfumes

These three bottles were filled with domestic perfumes made by Colgate & Co.

Which would you have chosen in this Perfume Test?

HE test was made by 103 representative women, comparing six perfumes—three of which were the most popular foreign perfumes and three were domestic, made by Colgate & Co. Over $\frac{3}{5}$ of the 103 women chose Colgate's in preference to the imported. Before making the test 61 of the 103 said they preferred a foreign perfume, yet when the influence of a foreign label was removed 41 of these 61, or $\frac{2}{3}$ of them, chose Colgate's first.

Every woman will be interested in the story of this test

It shows very clearly that selecting a perfume because it has a foreign label does not necessarily result in a woman's getting what she really prefers.

The test was conducted as follows by two impartial judges (Mr. F. N. Doubleday of Doubleday, Page & Co.; Mr. S. Keith Evans of the Woman's Home Companion). They purchased three of the most popular imported perfumes and three Colgate perfumes—all in original unopened bottles. The judges poured the perfumes into six plain bottles, numbered from one to six, and kept a record by which they alone knew which number represented each perfume. From time to time strips of Perfumers' Blotting Paper were scented from the numbered bottles under the supervision of the judges, and these were used in making the test. The 103 women represented business women, the stage, the

First choice of 18 women, Foreign Perfume 4

First choice of 12 women, Foreign Perfume 2
First choice of 10 women, Foreign Perfume 5
First choice of 9 women, Colgate's Eclat

Note these little stories of women who had been buying a label rather than a perfume:

A prominent actress, who had previously used a certain French Perfume, which happened to be in this test, placed that perfume fourth and Florient first.

A prominent member of the senior class of Vassar College chose Colgate's Florient although what she thought was her favorite perfume was in this test, and accorded that perfume fifth place.

Three Smith College girls in like manner passed by their unlabeled ~~avored~~ choice and two chose Splendor, one Eclat.

An editor of a well-known woman's periodical, whose profession brings her in touch with all that is best in perfumes, foreign or domestic, chose Colgate's Splendor after expressing a preference for a famous French perfume included in the test, which she put in second place.

editorial staffs of two women's magazines and college women. Each was asked to name the perfume she was in the habit of using and was then given 6 strips of the scented paper numbered 1 to 6 corresponding to the numbers on the bottles. She was asked to make a first choice, a second, a third, etc. Record was kept of all selections.

When the tests were completed the judges took the record, and inserted the names of the perfumes in place of the numbers from the key which they alone had. The result was then announced to Colgate & Co. It was a daring test—inspired by the confidence which we had in the superiority of our perfumes. How is your choice of perfumes determined? By what you really prefer or by a foreign label? Is it not possible that a domestic label is keeping you from the enjoyment of the particular perfume you would naturally select?

Would You like to make the Test for yourself?

If so, we will send you three Perfumers' Testing Strips, three miniature vials of the Colgate Perfumes—Florient, Splendor and Eclat—and an extra strip of paper so that you can make a comparison between Colgate's and the perfume which you may now be using.

This test will not only be valuable to you but can be used as an interesting form of entertainment for your friends. We will send full instructions as to how to make the test. Your name and address and a 2c stamp for mailing will receive prompt attention.

FOR THE HOSTESS

EGGS, for all their familiarity, supply that variety which is the spice of good food, and from the simple, boiled-in-the-shell egg for breakfast to that most delicious of dinner sweets, the omelette soufflé, they may be made to offer change for every day of the year. The omelette soufflé is at once the easiest and the hardest test for the amateur cook, yet its only requisites are new-laid eggs, a hot oven ready to the moment, and care.

For a dinner for four people, six eggs should be used; if more than four people are to be served it is best to make the omelet in small quantities and to double the process rather than the portions. The whites of the eggs should be separated from the yolks and beaten and four tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar should be sifted lightly over them and worked in gently with the egg beater. Into the yolks, of which only four may be used, half the rind of a yellow lemon and a smaller portion of the rind of an orange should be grated. As a flavor, a dessert-spoonful of sherry, rum, or brandy—whichever is preferred—or a teaspoonful of vanilla should be added; the vanilla is apt to prove insipid. These ingredients should be beaten well into the yolks and then the whole should be folded gently but thoroughly into the whites, turned quickly into a warm, buttered baking dish, and sifted over the top with powdered sugar. The omelet should be set in a hot oven for five or six minutes—the oven must be piping hot—and, when very light, served immediately from the baking dish to warmed plates. As an accompaniment for this omelet, transparent, green, gingered preserves of the watermelon rind, or any other fine and delicate preserve is good. The omelet is especially pretty if it is served with slices of orange set with maraschino cherries; in this case, the flavoring should be merely vanilla.

A SWEET OMELET

Another sweet omelet to be served for dinner or late supper is made, also, with six eggs. The whites and the yolks of the eggs must be beaten separately to a light froth, then folded together and poured into a hot, well-buttered frying-pan. For cooking omelets nothing answers so well as the old-fashioned black iron skillet.

As the eggs stiffen they should be loosened gently and carefully from the sides and bottom of the pan to prevent their scorching. When the omelet is well stiffened, one half of it should be covered with orange marmalade, currant jelly, or strawberry or raspberry preserve, and the other half should be folded over it with a broad spaddle. With the same spaddle the omelet should be lifted gently but quickly to a large, round, hot platter. Powdered sugar should be sifted over the top and the omelet should be set for a few moments under the red-hot bars of the gas broiler from which the flame has just been turned off, or a red-hot shovel should be held over it so the sugar will bubble and brown. A demi-tasse of brandy should be poured over the omelet and set aflame; the brandy will burn for about two minutes and it is pretty to place the omelet on the dining-table to be served allumé.

In Holland and Belgium, the salad course is often varied by serving a hot soufflé of fish, cheese, or peppery rice with thinly shaved cucumbers and watercress, crisp chicory, or the inner hearts of lettuce sprinkled with a tart French dressing which is very different from the more usual oil and vinegar dressing, since there is merely a soupçon of oil, a suggestion of garlic or onion, a dash of cayenne, salt, of course, and vinegar.

For a fish soufflé to serve with such a salad one cup of hot mashed potatoes beaten to a cream, one scant cup of well-shredded, cooked fish,—shad, or white, or blue fish is good for this purpose,—four eggs separated and each portion whipped until very light are used. The fish is added to the potatoes, seasoned with a saltspoonful of salt and half as much pepper, and turned into the beaten yolks and then into the whites. The whole is placed in a warm, buttered baking dish and baked in a hot oven for from twelve to fifteen minutes. It should be served as soon as it is done, as it will shrivel if it is allowed to stand.

CHEESE SOUFFLÉ

Cheese soufflé is especially delicate if served with any ice-cold vegetable salad. One cup of dry, grated bread-crumbs should be put into a double boiler with two cups of milk and heated well, then set aside to cool. Four eggs should be separated and the yolks and whites should be beaten separately until they are very light. The yolks should be turned into the double boiler and a half-pound of grated, dry, yellow cheese, seasoned with a pinch of cayenne pepper and a saltspoonful of salt should be added. Then the beaten whites should be folded in and the whole should be turned into a buttered, warm baking dish. The top should be dusted with grated bread-crumbs and the soufflé should be baked for twenty minutes in a hot oven and served at once, lest it should fall.

Omelets for breakfast and luncheon offer tempting opportunities for experimentation, especially if served in individual portions. There should be in them no suggestion of soufflé. In Holland and France, an egg for breakfast means one boiled in the shell, but in Belgium delicate little omelets of two eggs are made. The eggs are first broken into a bowl that has been well rubbed with a raw onion or a clove of garlic, and then they are beaten to a light froth and poured slowly into the middle of a griddle greased with bacon drippings. The eggs are then dusted with salt and pepper, deftly folded over, transferred to a hot dish, surrounded with crisp green watercress, and sprinkled on the top with minced parsley.

BREAKFAST OMELETS

This simple omelet may be varied by folding in chicken livers minced fine with two large, nicely browned whole livers tucked into each end. It may be set in a bed of stewed kidneys, or delicately fried mushrooms, or may have crisp curls of bacon laid like a brown foam over the top of it; the garnishing of watercress or parsley, which serves to tempt the eye, should never be omitted. The garnishing, in fact, is the foundation upon which all color schemes in eggs are formed and it is the prime factor in most food presentations. The vivid sunshine of the eggs always needs the foil of a bit of greenery.

Especially is this true of baked or shirred eggs. For cooking baked or shirred eggs, there is nothing better than a white-lined, brown earthenware dish which fits into a silver stand. The dish should be heated and well buttered, and for each egg a tablespoonful of cream should be put in and the eggs dropped on it. The dish should then be set in a pan of hot water and put in a hot oven until the eggs are well jellied. When they are jellied the top of the eggs should be dusted with salt and pepper and sprinkled with minced parsley. Around the outer silver cover sprays of crisp watercress should be set.

This manner of cooking eggs may be varied by using, instead of the cream, a chicken gravy which has been seasoned with thyme and a bit of onion. When the eggs are well set, a portion of the white should be cut out from about each egg and well-browned chicken livers should be tucked in. Either watercress or curled parsley may be used about the eggs as a garnish.

Beauty Is Three Parts Care and
 One Part Nature

THE woman who knows the value of consistent care, who has maintained a continued freshness and attractive youthfulness throughout other seasons, will be seen at the Arden Salon D'Oro from time to time these October days, and will receive as many compliments at Easter as she does to-day.

THOSE who do not know, by experience, what Arden methods can do for them, will find a trial treatment (at $2.00) convincing. Such a trial has shown hundreds of women how really attractive they can look, and how easy it is to look their BEST at all times.

SPEED, restfulness and results are assured in every treatment administered. When in the Fifth Avenue Shopping District, call, if only for consultation.

"IMPOSSIBLE to call personally," many women write from all parts of the country, and Miss Arden sends them her little book,

"The Quest of the Beautiful," with her assurance that their needs can be successfully met by the use of her VENETIAN PREPARATIONS (sent by mail) and employed under her personal direction, by correspondence.

ESPECIALLY recommended at this time of the year, are:

VENETIAN ARDENA SKIN-TONIC. An astringent; clears, firms and whitens the skin naturally; more refining than hard water. $3., $1.50, 75c.

VENETIAN PORE CREAM. Positively closes enlarged pores, and refines a coarse skin. $1. Jar.

VENETIAN VELVA CREAM. An ideal skin food; feeds nourishingly the most delicate skin; restoring and preserving the satiny softness. $3., $2., $1., 50c.

VENETIAN CLEANSING CREAM. Indispensable for use with the ARDENA Skin-Tonic. Removes dust and keeps the pores thoroughly cleansed. $3., $2., $1., 50c.

VENETIAN MUSCLE OIL. Using it regularly, tiny wrinkles and lines will gradually yield, and hollows fill out. $4., $2., $1.

EBULLIENT NECKWEAR

Fluffy Boas and Plaited, Lace-edged
 Collars in Which the Costume Lets
 Off Its Overcharge of Frilliness

*Fashion says frills up, fashion says frills down.
 Tulle and ribbon boa;
 price, $8.95*

NECKWEAR is always an attractive subject. Pretty collars and boas and ties are accessories of dress all women like to buy, and in this they are wise, for well-chosen neckwear will do much to smarten a simple frock and will give such splendid service that money judiciously expended in it is usually a source of great satisfaction. Cheap neckwear, however, is seldom a wise purchase; it never looks anything but cheap and seldom wears well.

The collars and the collar and cuff set illustrated on this and page 96 are pretty examples of this season's accessories and show interesting details that are new. Plaits are particularly noticeable in several of the designs; where embroidery is used it is of exquisitely fine work in a simple design. The lace that is used to edge the new collars is usually of a fine, narrow quality.

The pretty collar sketched at the left in the middle of page 96 is of fine organdy with a charming design of cut-out embroidery and an edging of Valenciennes lace. High collars fitting close to the neck in the back and tiny revers with sharp points are features of the new neckwear. A collar which illustrates this tendency

Two collars have long passed unnoticed but a third to top two off is an innovation. Price, $1.50

Collars and cuffs take their cue from skirts and enter the winter scene side-plaited. Price, $1.95

at Amazingly Low Prices

¶ When the great war in Europe was first rumored, the Plymouth Fur Co. bought a large number of selected fur pelts for a surprisingly low price as raw pelt dealers needed cash.

¶ These pelts are offered at the same great saving we made and as a result, fine furs are now offered at unheard of low prices. In our long business experience, we have never been able to offer such wonderful values.

¶ The supply is limited. Orders will be filled as received but preference will be given to orders accompanied by remittances. Positively no orders will be filled for dealers. Our usual guarantee goes with each order and full refund will be made immediately if furs are not up to expectations. We reserve the right to return remittances when each lot is sold out.

Each Corn Puff Consists of a Myriad Toasted Flakes

You lovers of corn have a new delight which your grocers have just received.

It is drop-size bubbles of corn.

It is toasted corn hearts, made airy and flaky and thin. It comes to you as porous pellets, filled with a myriad cells. And each cell is bounded by toasted corn flakes.

It's a wonderful creation.

Prof. A. P. Anderson—the man who invented Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice—has worked for eight years on these Corn Puffs.

He doesn't puff the whole grain. He takes just the sweet part—the hominy part—and forms it into pellets. In mammoth guns these pellets are toasted for an hour, then exploded.

And these bubble-like drops come out.

This is corn's finest product. You know nothing like it, in form, flavor or texture. Each pellet is an airy ball of flakes.

Every granule—as in all Puffed Grains—is blasted by a steam explosion. And no other method so fits grain for digestion.

Food"

Welcome this food to your table. Serve it today while it's new. Serve with cream and sugar, mixed with fruit or floating in bowls of milk.

For hungry children in the afternoon, douse Corn Puffs with melted butter. Let them eat it like peanuts or popcorn.

You who know Puffed Grains have long wished that corn could be made as delightful. Now it is done—go get it.

deep pink at the back. The boa shown at the top of the page is a bit more pretentious. It is in a combination of black tulle and black taffeta. The boa illustrated at the top of page 94 affords a striking contrast in alternating ruffles of black and white plaited tulle and an encircling line of black satin bows.

Valenciennes lace rims a pretty organdy collar with a design in cut-out embroidery. Price, $1.95

By its high, close back and sharp-pointed revers is a certain type of new collar known. Price, $1.50

In company with two companions, the one rose which fashion adopted as a summer protégé is seen on the back of a winter boa priced at $10.50

A—CREAM EMBROIDERED NET BLOUSE. The net is mounted over a flesh colored chiffon, with panel and bodice of soft creamy satin. New sleeves with flare cuff; may be had in all cream lace over flesh chiffon, cream lace and navy satin, cream lace with black satin. $8.49.

B—BLOUSE "MARGUERITE." This picturesque blouse, made of soft satin, is copied from a French model. A pretty contrast is the dark silk with a vestee of white Georgette crepe. Dainty rose on shoulder. Tiny dark buttons on the white continue this effect. In shades of black, white, tete de negre, dark green and gold satin, with white vestee. $10.89.

C—"JEU" PUSSY WILLOW BLOUSE. For all outdoor sports this is one of the most serviceable silks that can be obtained. It is soft and lustrous and launders perfectly. The original square collar gives style, $7.49. Same model of Crepe de Chine, Either Blouse in Women's and Misses' sizes, including 14, 16, 18 up to 46, $6.49.

D—MACY'S COUNTRY CLUB SHIRT. A practical, well-tailored shirt with elastic band at belt which holds it securely and neatly in place. Can be had for either Women or Misses. Made of linen, $2.89; Habutai silk, $4.89; Washable satin, $6.89.

E—BLOUSE "AÉRIEN." New model of flesh chiffon cloth, developed with panels patterned with black conventional design. Very artistic in effect is the hemstitch outlining of the panels. Girdle of black moire, fastened with jet buttons. A charming blouse for any dressy suit occasion. $3.79.

F—TAILORED PUSSY WILLOW BLOUSE. Well tailored tucked front, new reverse collar and large pearl buttons used to fasten front and trim well-cut cuffs. In white, with black and white pipings; all navy, or navy, with black and white pipings. Also all black, which makes a conservative morning blouse. $7.49. In Women's and Misses' sizes.

VANITY FAIR

THIS is the cover of the October number, now on sale at all news-stands. When you pick it up, you will perhaps for the first time have a magazine printed in America that——is as full of brilliant photographs of notable people as the London "Tatler";

—is to American sport what the "Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News" is to British sport;

—presents the same kind of advanced French fashions you are accustomed to find only in "L'Art et la Mode" of Paris, or "Vogue" of New York;

HERE is a very notable step in the evolution of American periodicals. Vanity Fair is the super-magazine of Society, Sport, the Stage, Fashions and the Fine Arts.

Would you consider this jury's opinion of a magazine worth anything? In the September number of you will find opinions of the magazine—each expressed in his or her own lively manner—not only from these twelve, but from sixty-five others equally worth consulting.

If you like the great English weeklies—if you enjoy unusual photographs of unusual people—if you are at all interested in horses and dogs and motors and golf—if you want the best fashions for both women and men—then you will like Vanity Fair. The October number is now on the newsstands.

THE demand for Vanity Fair, at many newsstands of the better class, is far in excess of the supply. After the first day or two of sale at some of the smarter hotels it is very hard to get a copy. If the October number is difficult to secure, tell the newsdealer to put your name down for the November number, and for the other numbers that will follow.

E. Albrecht & Son

Founded 1855

Albrecht Corner St. Paul-Minn

prefer to see the play instead of to remain at home.

In "The Bludgeon" Mr. Armstrong has endeavored to draw a picture of the most devilish type of woman that any one could possibly imagine. This woman drives her first husband to the verge of madness, goads her second husband into killing her, and incidentally ruins the lives of two other men who cross her path during the course of her disastrous career. This horrible drama is constructed without skill; and it would not be difficult to prove that, at many points, it is untrue to nature. Since the piece encountered the emphatic failure it deserved, it is only fair to notice, as a matter of record, that the part of the she-devil of a heroine was acted with extraordinary skill by Miss Maude Hanaford. In her performance of this character, Miss Hanaford exhibited an art that was worthy of more noble uses.

"THE BEAUTIFUL ADVENTURE"

FROM two plays so unwarrantably horrible as "Innocent" and "The Bludgeon," it is rather a relief to turn attention to the charming sentimental comedy entitled "The Beautiful Adventure," by Robert de Flers and Armand de Caillavet. This is, to use the adjective advisedly, the loveliest play that has thus far been presented in the current theatre season.

Hélène de Trevillac is an orphan girl without a dowry who is consigned to the care of her aunt, the Countess d'Eguzon. Hélène and her cousin, André d'Eguzon, fall in love with each other; but the countess has made up her mind that her son must marry a more wealthy girl. Therefore, when André is sent to Vienna in the diplomatic service, his mother intercepts the letters between him and Hélène, and treacherously suggests to each of the young lovers that the other has been false. Then the countess arranges a marriage for Hélène with Valentin Le Barroyer, an irreproachable and tedious youth; and the misguided girl accepts this arrangement to satisfy her pique.

Five minutes before the wedding ceremony, André returns posthaste from Vienna, and the two lovers learn the tragic trick by which they have been separated. There is only one right thing for them to do. They run away together.

They travel to a little country cottage where the heroine has spent her childhood and where she has always planned to pass her honeymoon. Here they are awaited by Madame de Trevillac, the elderly grandmother of Hélène. This lovely old soul infers at once that André is Hélène's husband; she takes a fancy to him at sight, and compliments her little girl upon the choice that she has made. It would be awkward for the lovers to make an explanation at that moment; but the difficulty of an explanation becomes greater and greater as the inevitable moment is postponed. The poetic charm with which the old lady accepts the inference that the young people are married forces them ultimately to an unintended acquiescence to the relation which has been so sweetly and so irresistibly imposed upon them. This moment in the play is delicate; and the delicacy with which it has been handled by the authors is nothing short of exquisite.

The next morning the discarded bridegroom appears upon the scene, closely followed by the countess and her husband. The worthy and harmless and boresome Valentin is incapable of love, and the girl who has so lightly jilted him finds little difficulty in persuading him to accept the situation. When all the truth has been told, the countess is treated to a proper scolding, in which her husband joins forces with the elderly Madame de Trevillac; and arrangements are made for an immediate solemnization of the marriage of André and Hélène.

The theme of this very charming comedy—that love is the only real foundation of marriage and that no marriage without love is real—is a theme that should be preached to parents; and young girls should therefore be advised to take their mothers to this play. The piece is wholesomely conceived and beautifully written; and the poetic charm of the original is admirably preserved in the translation by Mrs. Golding Bright, who chooses to call herself by the pen-name of "George Egerton."

The delightful part of the grandmother in "The Beautiful Adventure" is played by Mrs. Thomas Whiffen; and it has been announced that her appearance in this play will be her last upon the stage. She reads her lines with an exquisite precision and impersonates the character with an art that is so subtle that it seems to hold the mirror up to nature. Since the death of Mrs. Gilbert, no other veteran of the American stage has been so revered and so beloved as Mrs. Whiffen. She has always been a careful and a thorough artist; and now, in the autumn of her years, she is revealing a performance which deserves to be studied to the last and least detail by all the younger actresses in America. It seems a pity that an art so fine and so impeccable as hers should ever cease to be; but when the final curtain falls on the career of this admirable actress and noble woman, a rumor will be heard from many thousand voices, saying, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

"THE PRODIGAL HUSBAND"

IT seems a pity that the best opportunity that has been afforded, in recent years, to Mr. John Drew for the exhibition of the range and versatility of his admirable talents should have occurred in a play that, in itself, is merely a thing of shreds and patches. "The Prodigal Husband," by Dario Niccodemi and Michael Morton, is a play of that especially exasperating type which imposes on the spectator at innumerable moments a desire to halt the performance (as if it were only a rehearsal) in order to point out to the authors an obvious expedient for improving the impression at which they are ineffectually aiming.

A prodigal husband has been reduced to the status of a bachelor by the dignified retreat of his more worthy wife; but he suddenly finds himself recalled to a mood of responsibility when the death of his concierge forces him to adopt the helpless little girl that she has left behind her.

The prodigal husband proves himself a worthy father until, when the girl has grown to womanhood, she is disturbed by a prevalent belief among his associates that he is harboring the girl as his mistress. The great Galcoto of gossip drives him ultimately to the indiscretion of urging his erstwhile foster-daughter to elope with him; but the girl takes fright at the change of his demeanor, and flees for refuge to his wife.

Pursuing the young girl to Brittany, the prodigal husband finds himself face to face with the wife he has not seen for many years. She has grown in beauty, and he falls in love with her a second time. Through the ministrations of his foster-daughter, he is reconciled with his wife, and is effectually cured of his temporary aberration.

It would not be difficult to dramatize any one of the three successive phases of this story; but, as it stands, the piece seems more like a succession of three separate one-act plays than a single and coherent three-act drama. As it is, the play is utterly lacking in the necessary element of sustained and cumulative interest.

"A MODERN GIRL"

"A MODERN GIRL," by Marion Fairfax and Ruth C. Mitchell, is an unacknowledged adaptation of a German play by Felix Filippi which was written several years ago. The name of Filippi is little known in America, because he is merely a journeyman-playwright. He knows the craft of the theatre; he can make plots which are sufficiently effective to afford suggestions to many other dramatists, but he is not a student of life, a creator of real characters, or a writer of distinction.

The plot of "Der Helfer" (which is at present called "A Modern Girl") is efficiently mechanical. A rich and proud aristocrat, reduced to temporary difficulties, is forced to borrow money from a successful Jew whom he has always refused to recognize as a social equal. Subsequently he discovers that his headstrong youngest daughter has paid an injudicious visit, late at night, to the Jew's house. The usual threats of scandal, murder, and enforced marriage are developed by the usual theatrical means. Ultimately, the girl decides that she really loves the Jew; and their marriage, by silencing the tongue of scandal, permits the family to live happily forever after.

In the American adaptation, this conventional plot is sunk beneath deep oceans of loquacity. Everybody talks at length, with rhetorical elaboration, about life in general and the behavior of his relatives in particular. The only redeeming feature of the production is the fine acting of Mr. Lee Baker, who plays the part of the Jew with admirable reticence.

The general performance accentuates a certain incongruity which is so common on the American stage that it calls for special comment. We are asked to believe that five of the characters are members of a single family; and this family is supposed to be typical of the aristocracy of New York. But the father speaks English with a German accent, the elder daughter speaks English with a Norwegian accent, the younger daughter speaks English with a British accent, the son speaks English with an American accent, and the mother speaks English with the indefinable accent of an ordinary actress. The fact that our American stage is the most cosmopolitan in the world is not always advantageous to the plays that we produce.

The furniture disclosed in what is presumed to be the home of this typical family of the aristocracy of New York is sufficient to set the bargain-hunters of Third Avenue screaming. Errors of taste may be condoned when they are not also obtruded as errors of art; but there can be no pardon for the nameless stage-director who cast a blind eye upon the furniture that is set forth in the first and third acts of "A Modern Girl."

"THE DRAGON'S CLAW"

IT is impossible to speak of "The Dragon's Claw" without expressing a sense of inexplicable disappointment; for it remains a mystery why the play and the production can have been so bad.

The scenes of "The Dragon's Claw" are set in Peking at the time of the Boxer rebellion; and the theme is similar to that of "The Drums of Oude," a one-act melodrama by the same author which ran for heaven knows how many nights in London, and which has justly made the name of Mr. Austin Strong familiar to theatre-goers on both sides of the Atlantic. Furthermore, the present war-play was produced in war-time by Mr. Henry Miller, who is an artist of established reputation. The names of Mr. Strong and Mr. Miller did not offer a prevision of a wasted evening; but the dismal impression made upon the public by "The Dragon's Claw" gives evidence that some one must have blundered.

The stage-direction seems unconscionably careless. There is no other adjective than that to describe an impression for which so fine an artist as Mr. Henry Miller must unaccountably he held responsible. And the play itself is dull and tedious, though it was written by an author to whom the public has been indebted for many romantic moments.

MOTOR NOTES

Erecting Defenses against the Onslaughts of Winter, and Making Proper Provision for the Extra Passenger

WITH the approach of cold weather, attention must be given to the comfort and warmth of the occupants of the rear seats of the car. Tonneau wind-shields, foot-warmers, and other forms of protection from the cold are all valuable, but nothing is more necessary than proper clothing. Because heavy coats are ungainly and cumbersome, lap-ropes which may be easily thrown off are to be preferred, if they furnish sufficient protection for feet and chest. A special type of the lap-robe which has neither the deficiencies of the lap-robe nor of the coat has recently been designed. This is provided with foot pockets in the bottom. Attached to that portion of the robe which rests on the knees is a chest protector which consists of an apron sufficiently large to envelope the entire upper half of the body. This apron is provided with straps which hold the upper edge in place under the throat, and these straps are so arranged that the fastenings may be instantly released, and the apron let down. Double robes, having two pairs of foot pockets and two aprons, are also furnished, and these, as well as the single ones, are made both in light and heavy weights in fur, velours, and in a material like that made up in mackinaw coats.

COVERING THE EYES COMPLETELY

Goggles as manufactured nowadays not only serve as a protection to the eyes from the rush of wind, from insects, and from flying particles of dust, but are designed to soften the glare of the sun as well. This is accomplished by tinting the glass in the goggle an amber shade, or some other color that will absorb a portion of the rays. The use of bright electric and acetylene headlights for night touring, however, has filled the roads with such intense beams of light that the eyes of the motorist are seriously affected by the glare, even if he wears his day time goggles. The "two-way" goggle has therefore become popular. This goggle consists of darker colored glass for the upper portion so that the wearer may incline his head and thus shield his eyes whenever a car with blinding headlights approaches. This dark glass does not shut out the light entirely, however, and the driver is much better able to see the road ahead and the surrounding objects than would be the case were he looking into the unprotected dazzle of the brilliant lights. A novel form of goggle of this type has recently been placed on the market. Instead of a two-colored glass, this is made of a flexible piece of a transparent substance that is unbreakable. This is cut to fit over the bridge of the nose and to cover both eyes completely. The edges are bound either in rubber or in silk, and the goggle is held securely in place against the eyes by means of an elastic band fastened by the conventional type of snap hook or by a pair of special hairpins.

A MINIATURE CARRYALL

The war has not served to close communication with England, and therefore motorists who are desirous of obtaining the latest novelties which are produced on the other side may still be able to obtain an ingenious case that has recently been brought out. This is a leather case provided with pockets of various shapes and sizes intended for the accommodation of the driver's license, postal cards, visiting cards, stamps, court-plaster, a note-book, a trip book, a map measure, and a fountain pen. When folded, the pocket-book measures six and one quarter by four and three quarters inches. It is made in a variety of leathers, including Morocco of any color, pigskin, seal, and crocodile, and sells at prices ranging from $6 to $12.

THE EXTRA PASSENGER

The ordinary runabout is a two-passenger vehicle, sometimes provided with an extra seat for the accommodation of the chauffeur. This extra seat, however, whether in the form of a folding "rumble" on the rear deck, or a collapsible seat placed at the side over the running-board, was at best a makeshift, and it was a hard-hearted host who would ask a guest to ride in one of these uncomfortable seats. The extra passenger always looked as though he were trailing behind in the dust or of hanging on to the side of the car, and when one type of runabout was produced having one extra seat over each running-board, it met with but little success. Knowing that there is a great demand for more comfortable quarters for the extra passenger, one well-known manufacturer has brought out a bonafide three-passenger runabout. The width of the car proper has not been increased, although the body itself has been made a few inches wider. Much of the extra space is obtained by setting the driver's seat three inches forward of the front edge of the double side seat. This gives his shoulders and arms greater freedom for the control of the car without interfering with the person who sits next him. The additional space back of the driver's projecting seat forms a compartment in which tools or other requisites may be stowed, and the cover of this compartment is made of a piece of upholstery like that on the other seats. By making the seat next the chauffeur only about six inches wider, ample room is provided in it for two.

A QUICK CHANGE BODY

Though for winter use there are limousine bodies which can be attached to the chassis on which the summer touring body is mounted, and two cars are thus obtained from the one vehicle, this extra limousine body is costly, and the work attendant upon its replacement on the frame is considerable. To dispense with a large portion of this cost and trouble, one company has produced a removable "upper works," consisting of solid top, glass sides, panels, and rear that fit perfectly on to the side and back of the touring-car body. The same floor and seats are thus used for both bodies, and the method of attachment is so simple that two men can make the change in a few minutes. There are but six bolts to fasten, and the connections for the electric dome and side lights are made automatically as the body is set in place. The cost is $350 in addition to the price of the touring-car to which it is to be attached.

A New Advance

In Luxurious Body Building

We offer, this fall, to luxury lovers a finished conception of an artistic Limousine.

Not a HUDSON conception. We are masters of car building, but palatial body designing is an art by itself. This Limousine body is built for us by famous New England coach builders. It is built—like this chassis—to typify all progress in this line.

A Fine Combination

In this HUDSON Six-40 we offer the masterpiece of Howard E. Coffin and his 47 engineers. The famous HUDSON corps has devoted four years to it. It is the ideal new-day Six.

This is the car—in the 1915 model—which has multiplied HUDSON popularity five-fold inside of a single year. It is so unrivalled that thousands of men waited weeks to get it when we could not fill our orders.

On this matchless chassis we mount this Limousine—built by men who hold top place in their line. In the result, you will find in many ways, the most attractive car of the day.

Some Elegancies

We offer four options in upholstery and trimming. The finest imported fabrics are employed. See sample books at your local HUDSON showroom.

The hardware is hard-rubber covered. All windows have sashless glass, and all window and door lights drop. The glass back of the driver, may be set at any height. The rear doors lock.

Roll curtains on windows and doors. Roll storm curtains both sides and front. Two collapsible seats in the tonneau which may be set to face front or rear.

Electric telephone to the driver, electric light in the dome. Toilet cases, smoking cases—all the dainty appointments.

The price is $2,550, f. o. b. Detroit. That's a new price for a quality car with luxurious Limousine. But the HUDSON—by efficiency and by quantity output—is creating new price standards. This price today buys the finest example of modern car building. And it buys you the limit in luxury. Visit your local HUDSON showroom and this Limousine will prove that.

The Advantage of Model Gowns

to New York Women

MANY of the best-dressed women in New York—women who are Vogue readers and particular about their frocks, were quick to recognize and take advantage of the unusual opportunities we offer in model gowns which had served their purpose in being exhibited to illustrate the latest Parisienne modes and fancies. These model gowns are originals and all different—your best friend cannot get one similar, unless she copies yours. At the price we sell them, you get two new frocks for the same amount you would pay for only one gown anywhere else. Then, too, you have a gown of the latest or advance mode with all those little French touches which mean so much to your frock.

Prices $25 to $125

Come and see them for yourself. You are not importuned. You may even meet one of your well-dressed friends here and then you'll understand why she can afford to wear such beautiful frocks.

We often have many tempting bargains in Waists and Wraps.

So many write for catalogs. We have none, because no two of our gowns are alike and they sell so rapidly that it is an impossibility. You should call and see them—even try them on.

and employer without rancor proves him the most Christian of private secretaries. (New York: Mitchell Kennerley. Price, $1.25 net.)

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON, by JOHN JAY CHAPMAN, is a brilliant essay on the great liberator by a man very closely resembling him in courage, consistency, tenderness of conscience, and fervor of temperament. To no other kind of man could Garrison appear quite so great a figure as he is pictured in this very unusual book. Mr. Chapman is right in saying that for the years between 1820 and 1830 we lived in a false security, but his touch of uncharity, the defect of most ardent reformers of strong conviction and uncompromising temper, makes it impossible for him to see virtue in the men who made terms with the time and with the period of stress that followed for the next thirty years.

The wonder is not that southern society, cursed with so cruel and detestable an institution as African slavery, should have halted in culture and developed traits of violence and brutality, but that a society so cursed should have had its distinguishing sweetness and charm. Doubtless, part of the northern subservience to the ante-bellum south, of which Mr. Chapman complains so bitterly, was due to the genuine kindness and unsuspecting cordiality of the better type of southerners. There are those who ascribed a certain amenity of southern manners to slavery and the duello, but now that both are gone such amenity of manners remains, and is doubtless due to the warmth of southern suns playing for many generations upon Anglo-Saxon reserve and frigidity. Mr. Chapman has made a fascinating and valuable book, and all generous minds will thrill with him at the courageous and uncompromising utterances of his hero, as all must thrill at the splendid madness of self-sacrifice seen in John Brown's raid. The closing chapter, which takes the author away from his immediate subject, is distinguished for eloquence and vision. By the way, why does so well informed a man as Mr. Chapman fall into the common error of supposing that the Declaration of Independence proclaims all men "created free and equal"? (New York: Moffat, Yard & Company. $1.25 net.)

HAIL AND FAREWELL: VALE, by GEORGE MOORE, closes the autobiographic trilogy of the man who touched greatness once in his life, when he wrote Esther Waters, and whose limpid prose makes even the most squalid and wilful parts of his confessions agreeable to read. Much of this volume is concerned with the Irish literary revival, more particularly with the men and women concerned in it, for George Moore realizes that modern Irish literature must be essentially part of English literature and is rather languid as to the movement itself. He pillories William Butler Yeats and pelts him with ridicule, even while acknowledging his genius. Two or three other men he speaks of with warmth, and Lady Gregory he professes to be unable to visualize, but George Russell, the mystic, some of whose verses stand alone for majesty and mystery in English poetry, he loves and venerates in a fashion that reflects credit upon both. He indicates Russell only by the initials "A. E.," behind which the poet concealed himself; Moore always prints these letters as a diphthong.

Nothing in the volume is funnier than the ridicule which Moore casts upon the official efforts to improve agricultural conditions in Ireland, and nothing is more savage than his attack on the Catholic Church, which he thinks has exercised a most baneful influence in his native land. Moore gives no sign of abandoning his hedonistic attitude towards women, but he ordinarily, as heretofore, treats his gallant adventures delicately, and his description of his Flemish mistress is a veritable triumph of delicious portraiture.

Some of the best things in the book are the critical opinions on painting and literature, done with a sure touch and earnest purpose. A good deal of the purely ancestral detail is tiresome, and most persons intelligently interested in the best that Moore has given the world would gladly have spared much of the amorous stuff, especially that of his rather disgusting late youth in London and his early days in Paris, if they might but have had in its stead a circumstantial account of the way in which the germ of "Esther Waters" to be found in the rush of the London slavery, sympathetically described in "The Confessions of a Young Man," grew after so many years into the full flower of his master-piece.

With the self-revelations of this volume the world has an opportunity to judge George Moore by such facts of his life and such impressions of his ideals as he seeks to reveal, and by what may be read between the lines as unconscious self-revelation. Wilful, courageous, absolutely honest, indecently frank, profoundly contemptuous of conventional moral codes, yet whimsically holding to an intensely conscientious conception of art, tolerant of everything except stupidity and pretense yet petulant and irresponsible in ordinary relations, he presents himself naked to the eyes of mankind. Of moral elevation, of generosity, of heroism, of large human sympathy, there is scarce a trace in this volume or in the other two that preceded it, yet there is a splendid fervor in several passages setting forth his conception of art, above all perhaps in his sixth chapter, where he expresses his enthusiasm for Manet and his belief in art as an interpretation of life. Nor must it be forgotten by the readers of this volume that this self-supposed hedonist discovered for himself the Sermon on the Mount. (New York: D. Appleton & Company. $1.75 net.)

WORTH WHILE NOVELS

STORIES OF RUSSIAN LIFE, by ANTON TCHEKOFF, translated from the Russian by Marian Fell, have a curious clear simplicity and quiet realism, as if they reflected from a perfect mirror made in a single plane, the life of the people with whom they deal. Tchekoff sees middle-class and peasant life with clear and sympathetic eyes, but his method forbids him to intrude sentiment upon the reader. One has the privilege of seeing in these truthful images, human life and Russian scenery as the author sees them. If one have a quickly sympathetic imagination, one feels the humor, the pathos, the tragedy of it all, but if one be sluggish in imagination and sympathy these tales may well seem mere dull and unadorned narratives of commonplace matters.

As to the translation, it is done with an attempt to reproduce by means of a somewhat unconventional English, and the employment of slang, the exact effect of the Russian, but it never quite loses an exotic flavor, almost as if the foreign idiom had been carried over into the translator's tongue. Perhaps this method was the best Miss Fell could contrive to serve her purpose, but the baldness of the style is at points a little repellent. (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.35 net.)

THE DUCHESS OF WREXE: HER DECLINE AND DEATH, by HUGH WALPOLE, will probably rank as the greatest novel published in English during the publishing season of 1913-14. Mr. Walpole had already proved his power and insight in the several novels that preceded his masterpiece, but his most

Every day in washing you rub off dead skin. This is your opportunity. You can make this new skin fresher, clearer, and more attractive by using the following treatment regularly.

Make this treatment a daily habit

Just before retiring work up a warm water lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap in your hands. Apply it to the face and rub it into the pores thoroughly always with an upward and outward motion. Rinse with warm water then with cold—the colder the better. If possible rub your face for a few minutes with a piece of ice.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is the work of an authority on the skin and its needs. Begin tonight to get the benefits of the above treatment for your skin. The first time you use it you will feel the difference—a promise of that lovelier complexion the regular use of Woodbury's always brings.

Woodbury's Facial Soap costs 25c a cake. No one hesitates at the price after their first cake. Tear off the illustration of the cake below and put it in your purse as a reminder to get Woodbury's today.

10% More for Your Money

Quaker Oats is put up also in a 25-cent size, nearly three times as large as the 10-cent size. By saving in packing it offers you 10 per cent more for your money. See how long it lasts.

Do You Know the Wealth of Energy

That Lies in Quaker Oats?

There is one grain in which Nature stores an exuberance of vim. Fed to mankind or to animals, it breeds spirit and vitality.

For ages men have known this. Among the intelligent, children all the world over are being brought up on this grain.

Quaker Oats presents this grain in its most delicious form. It brings it to you in large, luscious flakes, matchless in taste and aroma.

That's why the mothers of a hundred nations now send here for Quaker Oats.

Quaker Oats

Is Vim-Food Made Delightful

No puny grains—which lack in flavor—are used in Quaker Oats. We pick out only the big, plump grains, so we get but ten pounds of Quaker Oats from a bushel.

We apply dry heat, then steam heat. Our process enhances the flavor. Then we roll into large white flakes.

You get those luscious flakes—and those alone—when

Quaker Cooker

We have made to our order—from pure Aluminum—a perfect Double Boiler. It is extra large and heavy. We supply it to users of Quaker Oats, for cooking these flakes in the ideal way. It insures the fullness of food value and flavor. See our offer in each package.

you ask for Quaker Oats. And they cost you no extra price. You get this food at its best. You get it in tempting form. Because of these facts, a billion dishes are now served every year.

Please remember this. We are making this food to delight you, and you owe to yourself that you get it.

cordial admirers could hardly have expected of him aught of such scope and mastery as distinguish "The Duchess of Wrexhe." He calls his story "a romantic comedy," and such it is, on the surface, but he has made it also a comprehensive structure of social and political symbolism. It is a bold allegory of the changing politico-social order in the British Isles, but the characters who play their parts in this allegory are no mere embodiments of individual virtues or vices; they are living, breathing, human creatures, simple or complex, according as their nature requires, but real persons, acting from natural motives, some of them fully elaborated, others lightly sketched, but not one a mere unmeaning shadow. The old Duchess and her household, her obedient sons, her servants, her daughter, her daughter's secretary, and her faithful though disillusioned physician, stand for the old aristocratic social and political order that lasted through Victoria's reign, and crumbling, though powerful, "muddled through" the successive disasters of the Boer war to find itself, at length, in our new century face to face with democracy at every turn.

Such is the allegory, one not remotely suggesting the greatest work of its kind in English literature, "The Pilgrim's Progress," so amazingly wrought by the inspired tinker of Bedford jail. While feeling the inner significance of it all one follows with unflagging interest the varying fortunes of the very real persons who help to carry out the symbolism of the piece. The Duchess must be accepted as the greatest creation of the book, an old woman terrible in her pride, selfishness, hatred, revenge, and cruelty. She figures again and again in many scenes, the greatest, perhaps, that of her struggle with her physician when he courageously presumes to advise her about a piece of domestic policy. Over against her is placed in contrast the hated granddaughter, Rachel, who represents revolt from the old order, an admirably detailed piece of creative work. Not less skilfully indicated is "Roddy," the slow, simple, loyal, kindly soul, whose vices are peculiarly those of the old order, the special favorite and ally of the Duchess, and at length the unwilling and almost repentant traitor to her whom he had so long served. Again, the outcast grandson, weak, unattractive, but not utterly irredeemable, is presented in careful detail, not so triumphantly executed, perhaps, as several other characters, but in his way a creation. The doctor, the excellent Miss Rand, who sometimes becomes "Lizzie," her sentimental mother, Lord John, and the Duke, are all, in their varying degrees, sufficiently indicated for the purpose they serve, and there are besides something like a half-score of other dramatis personæ, and Felix Brun, who acts as chorus. A wise book, full of things to make one think and of great scenes to make one feel. (New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.40 net.)

THE PRINCE OF GRAUSTARK, by GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON, is a throw-back to his earliest successful story, but this time the new hero is the son of the earlier heroine. Again the new world and the old are brought together, and again Mr. McCutcheon permits himself the usual succession of audacious extravaganzas that please his faithful clientele. (New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.35 net.)

THE STRENGTH OF THE STRONG, by JACK LONDON, includes seven stories published in various magazines within the last five years. No doubt the author chose as his "leader" the story that gives title to the volume mainly because he felt it to be a catchy title, certainly not because he thought it the best thing in his book. Mr. London does everything with so much spirit that it is hardly good natured to suggest that primitive man as a subject of modern romance is almost played out. Perhaps his reply to such a criticism would be that he uses primitive man in such a tale as "The Strength of the Strong" to illustrate the relation of modern problems to those of our arboreal ancestors. Other stories in the volume deal with folk some thousands of years nearer ourselves, but, again, the motif is the illustration of the modern social problem. In one case, we have the conventional college professor whose investigations of union labor develop in him a secondary personality that in time becomes primary. Another story deals with the oft-discussed and prophesied general strike, and, of course, with its triumph, while yet another has to do with the yellow peril and how the nations meet it in a war toward the end of the twentieth century. (New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.25 net.)

THE RETURN OF THE PRODIGAL, by MAY SINCLAIR, is a stout volume of eight ingenious stories; one of the shortest furnishes the title to the whole collection. Incidentally this tale of the title rôle is one of the best in the volume. "The Fault," a story of unusual variety and charm, threatens for a moment to turn out Early Victorian, but the pitiless Miss Sinclair sternly gives her little romance the bludgeon at the right point, and everybody is miserable ever after. "The Cosmopolitan," which occupies nearly half the volume, is both dull and improbable, though it has Miss Sinclair's studied felicities of phrasing and characteristic subtlety of discrimination. "Appearances," the liveliest tale in the book, has some quite absurd Americans of the kind that English novelists know by heart and nobody else on earth encounters. The absurdity of the American as pictured in English fiction raises the question whether any human being short of the rarest genius can ever really know the folk outside his own village. Miss Sinclair resembles our American women writers in her polished cleverness and triumphant ease, but she lacks their perfect lightness of touch, and their freedom from self-consciousness. One might be justified in saying that American women as greatly surpass living English women as fiction as English male novelists of the day surpass their American brethren. All the same, an acute person of abundant leisure will find the tasting of Miss Sinclair's subtle flavors in this volume of stories a highly agreeable method of killing time. (New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.35 net.)

DOGS OF HIGH DEGREE

For the Present, American Mistresses Must Be Content with Home-made Dogs Instead of Imported Dogs like These

ALTHOUGH it has been said that large dogs are gradually succeeding "toy dogs" in the place of honor, the dog shows of the year have registered an amazing number of Pekingese, griffons, and Pomeranians. Even so ill a wind as a war has blown some good things to America, and the sudden cessation of the importation of English dogs will give American dog-fanciers an opportunity to enter the lists. Until recently every big ship which came to port in New York brought over as many as a dozen pedigreed dogs like those shown on this page, and while the American bred dog is not as good as the best of the English bred, it is much better than the dog which is sent from English to American markets; therefore are we to be congratulated upon having to buy home-made dogs.

WROUGHT in JEWEELED ENAMEL

Little Drops of Semiprecious Stones and Little Grains of Enamel Go to the Making of Craftsman Jewelry

IN that short block in Washington which is principally devoted to architects' offices, small shops for antiques, curios, and rare books, is to be found an interesting studio in which are fashioned most charming and dainty things to tempt the feminine heart. Here an Englishwoman, who is an American by adoption, works at long narrow benches spread with innumerable bits of colored enamel, silver, gold, precious and semi-precious stones, and with skilful and swift hands

Rings, enamel buttons for coats or cloaks, clasps, bracelets, pendants, and pins all receive unique and original treatment at the hands of the clever worker.

In the work of early craftsmen, the stones used in jewelry were of primary importance, and the mounting was almost invisible, but in modern work, such as is done by this artist, the gold, silver, and enameling have become an important part of the design, and rich and elaborate settings are wrought in which jewels are used rather

A gay little rose vine clambers up and several shimmering moonstone pendants hang below

This elaborate design in silver, moonstones and enamel suggests the work of eastern craftsmen

Without number are the variations of the brooch which may be wrought in the pretty, colored enamels

fashions the most artistic and ornamental types of jewelry.

In order to be a really successful worker in jewelry, one must have an unusually large share of the temperament of the artist, as well as a technical understanding of the science and craft of metal work. It is this combination of qualifications which gives to the products of this workshop originality of design and the perfection of finished detail that are so important in small pieces of jewelry. This maker of jewelry began her education in the arts in the school at South Kensington, where she learned to draw, to paint in oil and water-color, and to design, before she turned to the handicrafts and finally adopted the making of jewelry as her profession. This unusual preparation has developed a natural delicacy of taste, and has given dexterity and proficiency.

She works with equal skill in the various methods of enameling, but finds that known as plique-à-jour work best adapted to the more delicate pieces of jewelry. There is no limit to the possibilities of design or the character of the objects which can be made by this method.

for the decorative merit of their color than for their intrinsic value.

A precious stone is now considered beautiful less because it is large, costly, or extraordinary, than because of its color or glow and it is so set as to enhance its beauty by fitting it in a place in a decorative scheme. The cabochon stones, in general, combine better with enamel than do the cut stones, though, of course, the latter are also used in these enamel settings.

Jewelry, however, has not yet been able to win all of this talented Englishwoman's attention. Two very charming water-colors represented her at a recent exhibit of the Washington Water-color Club in the Corcoran Gallery, shortly before an exhibition of her work in jewelry was seen in the exhibition rooms of the National Society of Craftsman in New York.

THE PLAYGROUND OF DIPLOMATS

Hissar, standing out from a forest of minarets, are boldly etched against a cloudless expanse of sky. Once impregnable fortresses, now crumbling masses of ruins, these may yet be useful to Americans in indicating the location of Roberts College, which is situated beneath their frowning walls. Built by the Mahomedan conquerors, they are one of the historical facts which mentally trip one up at every turn in this quarter of the globe. Fortunately no one is expected to know about them. No one cares. Here, any one who can ride, dance, and play bridge, may dispense with erudition.

THE SPLENDOR THAT IS RUSSIA

Dinners are the chief form of entertainment. The most interesting and unusual are those given at the Russian Embassy, a fact which may be accounted for in some degree by the resplendent livery worn by the Cossack attendants there. Pink velvet knickerbockers and coat, white silk stockings, and yards of silver lace form a sumptuous costume. This embassy is an old-fashioned, rambling, yellow house, set in the midst of an enormous forest garden which runs from Buyukdere far towards the border of the Black Sea. It is covered with the trailing vines of white, yellow, pink, and crimson rambler roses and has a cosy, hospitable air, which is quite delightful, but which fails to prepare the guest for the gorgeousness within.

While Mr. William Woodville Rockhill was ambassador to Turkey, the American embassy was among the gayest. Mrs. Rockhill possessed not only beauty but social tact, which, combined with her long experience in diplomatic circles, made her a great favorite. Before coming to Constantinople, Mr. Rockhill had been ambassador for many years at St. Petersburg. In 1913 he resigned from the diplomatic service and he has since accepted a post in the Chinese government. He was replaced by Mr. Henry Morgenthau, whose service in Turkey was barely begun when the war upset all social activity.

Bridge follows the dinner, as a rule. Diplomatically, bridge is considered a valuable after-dinner accomplishment, as it "keeps the tongue tied and the purse strings open." When, as not infrequently happens, the Grand Vizier is the guest of honor, interest, as a matter of course, is doubled. The sound of the title alone is sufficient to give one the thrill of Arabian Nights tales. The ex-Grand Vizier, Hakki Pasha, was a very skilful bridge player, and his presence was always the signal for the appearance of the card tables. He was a short, stocky man, and, save for his red fez and his collection of jeweled orders, he looked quite like any European in well-made evening clothes. Though his manner was always gracious, meeting him whether as opponent or partner gave one, it must be confessed, a not altogether enjoyable sensation in the region of the neck, and aroused vague memories of "off with his head."

SPORTS AND PLEASURE GROUNDS

Polo and polo teas are also among the social events. There is a small, unostentatious club near Therapia, where polo is played once a week. The English officers from the cruisers are the principal players, and tea is served to the strains of a battered brass band.

In addition to the polo teas, there are the days "at home" of the wives of the ambassadors, which are not strictly observed save by Madame Bompard, the wife of the French ambassador, who makes much of her reception days. Her guests are received in the terraced gardens at the back of the embassy, which are beautiful with masses of oleander and gladiolus, and with jasmine, myrtle, and roses, which run riot over terraces and wall. Fountains bubble merrily in the midst of a labyrinth of white pebbled paths, and nightingales sing, securely concealed from view in the thick foliage of the fig tree or the waxy blossomed magnolia. It is a typical garden of the region of the Bosphorus, a riot of color, a profusion of scents, and, withal, not a blade of grass to be seen.

Still another meeting place of the social world of Therapia is at the "Sweet Waters of Asia." A row here is to the residents of Therapia what a drive in the Bois is to the Parisian, or what the gardens of the Pincio are to the Roman. Though romantic in sound, the "Sweet Waters" in reality form but a tiny stream, which wends its way for about a mile through wooded fields to the sea. So shallow is it that even the lightest boat will run aground in some places. At the entrance is one of the smaller palaces of the Sultan, and near it is a public pleasure ground. Here, all the afternoon, the veiled Turkish women of the poorer classes sit in groups of five or six, hunched up in balls, munching sweets and pistachio nuts, and watching their children play, or gazing out into the distance at nothing.

In many ways this playground of Turkey resembles those of Europe and America. There are small donkeys waiting to be ridden, under the guidance of red-fezzed attendants. There are hordes of children gently playing most familiar looking games to which they give most unpronounceable names, and there are itinerant vendors of ice-cream, and of lemonade and water, drawn from a remarkable machine slung across their shoulders, which looks for all the world like the trumpet of a brass band.

The "Sweet Waters" is one of the favorite resorts of Pierre Loti. His house, where he passes most of the time during his annual sojourn in Turkey, is not far distant, and almost any afternoon will find him in his two oared kaik, the native boat, drifting languidly on the blue waters of his beloved Bosphorus.

PRINCES FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

In winter and in the early spring the "Sweet Waters of Europe," on the opposite side of the Bosphorus is the chosen rendezvous of diplomatic society. This pleasure ground is more accessible to Constantinople than that on the Asiatic side, and though less famous it is far more beautiful. In this part there is a charming little marble palace profusely carved in tracery which belongs to the Sultan, and there is also a pavilion where coffee is served.

In addition to its diplomatic colony, the Bosphorus coast boasts the summer residence of many a native or foreign prince. The Khedive of Egypt has a beautiful palace on the Asiatic side, the Khedivah, his mother, has one on the European shore. She is a very energetic and broad-minded old lady, intensely interested in modern progress, who admires the European woman greatly. Her lady-in-waiting and confidential friend is a charming Englishwoman. Notwithstanding her liberal views, however, she was quite averse to the marriage of her son with a Frenchwoman. In order to marry the Khedive, this Frenchwoman adopted the Mahomedan religion, but expected that, none the less, by virtue of her foreign birth, she would live as a European wife. No sooner were they married, however, than the Khedive took her to the Bosphorus coast, where he spends the greater part of every summer, and installed her in a hunting lodge some miles from the palace, where, well watched and guarded in Oriental fashion, he left her to await the consent of his royal mother. This consent was delayed for an entire summer and the lady in the lodge was fain to rest in exile, while the episode, somewhat sensational and not untinged with romance, afforded much satisfactory dinner conversation for the European colony on the opposite side.

OLD-TIMY PATCH QUILTS

Oil Green and Turkey Red Pieces, and Sometimes Those with the Blue of Old China, Exquisitely Patched on a White Foundation

THE woman who appreciates fine needlework, and enjoys having about her things which carry with them a suggestion of the peace and patience of our grandmothers' day, can not fail to be interested in the piece and patch quilts made throughout Appalachian America and found, perhaps, in their greatest perfection in the mountains of Kentucky. Through the enthusiasm of people who wish to establish some bond of interest between the mountain people and the rest of the world, these charming quilts are finding their way to market.

One collector who has been especially diligent has, in a few years, collected eighty-six quilts of established names and different designs, and the end is not yet in sight. The end, indeed, is not attainable, for not only past history, but current events, as well, are written in the quilts, and so there are ever more and more to be made. The faith, the romance, and the political history of the mountains are often inscribed in a whole series of indescribably quaint bedspreads.

There is a picturesque series of "bible quilts" which is best represented, perhaps, in "the dove at the window," sometimes called "Noah's dove," "steps to the altar," "Solomon's crown," and, loveliest of them all, "The rose of Sharon." An entertaining example of the romance series is called "The broken engagement," and the cynical mood of the mountaineer finds expression in an intricate pattern called "The way of the world." Another interesting design, strangely baffling to the uninitiated, but absurdly simple to those who cut the pattern, is called "the fool's puzzle."

TREASURE TROVE FOR DECORATORS

The work itself is exquisitely done, and to decorators in search of things distinctive and admirable these quilts are real treasures. The oil green and turkey red of fine old patterns such as the "ostrich feather," with its accompaniment of "hoop and feather" quilting, and the "Mississippi oak leaf," with its diamond quilting, that are so delightful when discovered in a dark mountain cabin, are no less effective in a brown bungalow in the Maine woods. For a girl's room the old rose coloring of a "basket" quilt, to mention one of many, is beautiful and fitting. A really good four-poster is never so much itself as when covered with a quilt done in a design of the blue of old china with the white spaces filled in with fine quilting in definite designs.

The loveliest of the designs have been repeated in miniature for cradle quilts, and surely even a baby must sleep more sweetly under a little quilt with tiny roses or forget-me-nots "patched" on and the quilting filled in with fine stitches.

PATCHES OF POLITICS AND ROMANCE

Easily first in interest in the political series is the splendid "Whig Rose," with swinging garlands in its half moon border. "The Radical Rose" dates only from the eventful sixties, and "The Cleveland Lily," even more modern, is a typical cubist drawing. A quilt in one of the most amusing patterns of all, found in a log cabin many miles from a railroad or even a rural mail route, is called "Hobson's Kiss." Surely, interest in a collection with such possibilities as this could never pall.

In a mountain cabin one may find quaint "bible quilts," and loveliest of them all is "The Rose of Sharon"

Hoop and feather quilting surrounds the brave yellow and red and green motifs of the fanciful "tulip quilt"

THE COMMITTEE of MERCY

THE deep and wide-spread sympathy evoked by the war has aroused men to the necessity which exists not only for relief for the wounded, but for aid for those innocent victims of war, the women and children left destitute through the loss of the family bread-winner.

To this end an international movement has been originated to provide funds for the relief for the distressed wives, children, and other dependents of soldiers involved in the European war. This work is being organized by the Committee of Mercy, which has recently opened headquarters in Room No. 336, Fifth Avenue Building, New York City. Senator Elihu Root is president of the organization and the treasurer of the organization is August Belmont.

In accordance with the desire of President Wilson for strict neutrality, fraternity and non-partisanship are the underlying principles of the Committee of Mercy, and the relief it offers will be extended to all sufferers, without distinction as to country. It will not enter the field of the Red Cross, which ministers to the needs of sick and wounded soldiers, but will devote its entire energies to aiding those whom the soldiers leave behind, not only in the various European countries, but in America itself, where the families of 250 reservists are left destitute.

Forty-eight independent state committees will be formed, which will carry on the detail work of collecting funds and organizing entertainments in the different states all over this country, and the main committee will take charge of the clearance and immediate distribution of all funds entrusted to the organization, as well as to collection.

The funds will be administered in the different warring countries by prominent American women, who will act in consultation with the government in each country. In England, the administrative committee is already formed and includes the Duchess of Marlborough, Lady Paget, Lady Alice Lowther, Mrs. Harcourt, wife of the British Colonial Secretary, Lady Randolph Churchill, Mrs. John Astor, and Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain. Count Sierstorf, of the General Committee has already left for Germany to consult with Mrs. Gerard, wife of the American ambassador, and with other American women with regard to relief for German sufferers, and similar committees will be formed in the other countries involved in the war.

Among the first Americans to join in this work were Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Mrs. Melville E. Stone, Prof. William D. Sloan, Mrs. Sloan, Mr. Vincent Astor, Mr. Louis Brandeis, and Mr. Norman Hapgood. The first foreign members include Mr. T. G. Glen-Coats, Mr. John Moffat, Prince Paul Troubetzky, and Count Adalbert Sierstorf. The need of funds for this purpose can not be overestimated and the committee appeals for subscriptions, which should be forwarded to its treasurer, Mr. August Belmont, Fifth Avenue Building, New York.

By its broadly humanitarian basis, the organization offers a field of activity for those who wish to lessen the suffering caused by the war, yet remain neutral in the strictest sense of the word. All funds collected on this basis will be divided equally among the different countries. Donors who wish their assistance to go to any special country or countries, however, may specify that when sending their contribution, and the amount will be forwarded to the relief committee of the country specified.

It is hoped, not only that personal contributions to this work will be generous, but that entertainments and charity fêtes may be organized throughout the country to raise funds for the purpose, since the strict non-partisanship of the organization makes it an ideal distributor of funds raised by the efforts of many people, who may be wholly at variance on the subject of the war.

evening gown of white silk and tulle, the tulle is looped all about from the belt between narrow V-shaped gores of silk to form deep pockets into which I saw the pretty manikin thrust her pretty hands. The narrow side gore of a gray cloth skirt is cut across at the hip, puckered a bit, and turned back on itself, to form an odd and pretty pocket; the turned back bit is faced with green and white plaid silk.

Chéruit too places pockets in unexpected places, sometimes directly in front, but Chéruit's pockets are always well disguised, hidden away under bands or under narrow up-standing frills. What Poiret would have done in the way of pockets had not Poiret gone to the war one can only imagine. As it is, one missed Poiret this season in Paris. The daring originalities and naive quaintnesses of his models are always stimulating and generally successful, and the closing of his place at the beginning of the war left a great gap. However, it was opened again on August 28, and has since been conducted under the management of Mlle. Germaine, the première vendeuse.

COUTURIERS UNDER ARMS

athletic young Frenchman who wears near-English clothes and goes in heavily for sports. They know every one of importance in the European world, including several kings and queens, and under all the importunities of their designers and friends, they will not yield an inch to the American demand for novelties twice a year. By refusing to compete with the other houses in this way, they have lost much American trade, but this does not alter their convictions.

Armand, the junior member of the arm of Martial et Armand, is one of the social personalities who is seen everywhere in Paris—at the opera, the smart restaurants, and the races. He is unmarried and a man of means, able to gratify his tastes for the social side of French life. He comes from Switzerland and he is the designer for the firm. He has very clever ideas about dress and knows how to turn out the French woman with great skill. In his own apparel he is quite a dandy, just as Paul Poiret is, and he is a leader of fashion among all those young French dandies who are a lord unto themselves in dress and who are never without a touch of the picturesque about their clothing.

Salt's POMOIRÉ

TO account for this season's tremendous popularity of fur effect fabrics, as evidenced at all places where the ultra in style predominates, one only has to examine the wonderful effects possible with Salt's "Pomoiré." This soft luxuriant textile fur material, with its exquisite finish and lustre, comes in black, Russian green, corbeau blue, sphinx gray, bronze, prune and brown. It is so widely favored that the best stores are offering it in their most popular Cloak, Suit and Cape models.

These garments are so beautiful in design and so attractive in price that they appeal at once to the most refined taste and to the most modest purse.

See them at your favorite store, and for your protection insist upon this label in every garment

We also invite you to inspect garments made of Salt's "Meritex" and Salt's Arabian Lamb. We will gladly send samples of any of these materials upon request and, if you wish, refer you to a dealer who can supply you. Many of the best stores are offering "Pomoiré" and "Meritex" by the yard.

FAIRINGS of the RAG FAIR

Early on Wednesday Mornings, May the Roman Tourist Catch the Bargain Among the Quaint Old Booths and Stalls of the Campo di Fiori

THIS morning we have been wandering about in the Campo di Fiori where the Rag Fair is held. What La Foire aux Jam-bons is to Paris the Rag Fair is to Rome, with the delightful difference that the Rag Fair occurs every Wednesday morning while the Ham Fair comes but once a year—in mid-lent.

We were up and away early this morning, for it is the old story of the early bird catching—the bargain. By eleven, when we were ready to come home, the crowd of tourists was so great that they were moving in compact masses up and down among the booths, but when we arrived on the scene at shortly before nine, we strolled about leisurely and had the most eager attention from the merchants. The excuse we gave ourselves for this day's visit to the market was the desire to find a certain string of curiously cut garnet beads that one of our party had passed by the preceding Wednesday, only to regret it ever since, and she now hoped against hope that the string had remained unsold and that it would be displayed again to-day.

DIPLOMATIC BAZAR HUNTING

We dismissed our cab in the Piazza Navona and hurried across the Corso to the Campo di Fiori and down the tributary street where the stalls of the jewelers are located. We peered and poked about in many a tray of rubbish, each trying to maintain a stoical expression and an air of Oh-I-never-intend-to-buy-even-if-a-Kohinoor-should-be-found-amid-this-mass-of-merchandise. But the string of garnets did not come to light and we were forced to conclude that some one else had been quicker to see and seize the pretty thing, perhaps just before the closing hour when prices go down as wares are packed up.

Down through the lanes made by the booths in the Piazza are stalls where are sold all sorts of clothing of cotton and wool, male and female, big and little, and all sorts of household linens of a cheap variety—a locality which has little attraction for the tourist. Extending only a little way on the first cross street are booths where copper and brass are sold,—old knockers, fascinating lamps, all varieties of bowls and trays, and bewitching braziers. These are filled with embers and are set about in the shops and homes of the Italians under the delusion that heat is diffused from them. When carried to America, they cease to serve as "chauffage centrale" and become charming receptacles for flowers or plants.

Then comes the street where old embroidered silk shawls, emblems of somebody's lost grandeur, are sold; where one may buy scraps of brocade and tapestry which are pretty and available for many uses, bits of embroidery on silk, wool, and damask. This morning we saw large linen towels of splendid quality with a border of hand-work resembling punch-work, and these for five lire a towel, without negotiation. Then there is the street where the silver spoons, the quaint silver pitchers and teapots, and articles in hand-wrought silver are collected in one indiscriminate mass. And here the disappointed seeker, after garnets was consoled by finding a great salad spoon engraved with her own initials surmounted by a coronet. One can not pick up a coronet every day for ten lire.

"ASK ME NO QUESTIONS, AND—"

It is not wise to question where these things come from, for while some of them doubtless are obtained from reliable shops on the Corso and the Via Sistina (shops the proprietors of which know well the fascination of bargain hunting in the Campo di Fiori and, it is whispered, ask more for their wares at the Rag Fair than in their own shops), most of the things sold here are disposed of by those in financial stress or are come by through channels not entirely legitimate.

A great deal of worthless stuff is displayed in the jewelry booths, but among the trash can be found an occasional treasure in the way of a stone cameo, bit of coral, or a curiously wrought bracelet or brooch.

Another street is devoted to the book stalls. Naturally most of the books are in Italian, but there are a few in English and more in French. It was in a book market of this sort in Florence in the Piazza San Lorenzo ("June was the month, Lorenzo named the square") that Robert Browning found the yellowed parchment copy of the Franceschini case which he afterward transformed into his great work, "The Ring and the Book." We made no such find as his, but after hovering over the books for several Wednesdays, we were at last rewarded by stumbling on a rare illustrated edition of Lafontaine's "Fables" and a veritable treasure it is, now that it is home from the book-binder's in a new dress of soft brown leather, tooled in gold.

YESTERDAY AND TO-DAY

Beyond the main part of the Fair extends the flower, fruit, and vegetable market. It is a pretty sight in the sunshine with the gay colors grouped around the statue of Giordano Bruno, who, championing religious freedom, was executed in 1600 on the very spot where his bronze figure now stands. Just a few steps nearer the Tiber is the noble Farnese palace, built of material taken from the Colosseum and the Theatre of Marcellus, and now the residence of the French embassy and the scene of charming hospitality and of brilliant gatherings. Through the imposing portal, the beautiful court can be seen, and upon entering, one is met by a most magnificent majordomo in blue and gold, holding a stick topped by a gilt ball.

Frowning down upon the busy throng is the Palazzo della Cancelleria which is one of the noblest of Renaissance monuments. It was in the Cancelleria during the fiery days of 1848 that Count Rossi, as he ascended the steps of the palace where the new Roman parliament was to assemble on that very day, was stabbed by an assassin. But no gloomy memories assailed us as, clasping our well-earned bargains, we turned our backs on the fascinations of the Rag Fair for a week at least.

Ganesh Fore-head Strap ($4.50) for removing fore-head lines.

Lecture Number Two:

IMPROVING THE COMPLEXION BY RENEWING THE SKIN

All minor facial blemishes which mar the complexion are affections of the outer-skin. This cuticle or scarf-skin is merely a thin, transparent membrane formed of minute scales, which are the result of the exudations of the true skin beneath. These scales should be constantly removed, as nature intended, thereby gently obliterating the small blotches, scars, discolorations and other defects to which the cuticle is subject, leaving it smooth and glowing with the color beneath.

The Muscle Strapping Treatments

originated by Mrs. Adair and administered exclusively in America by her trained English assistants, at the New York Salon, rejuvenate the tissues and muscles of the face, neck and chest and remove all lines, hollows and puffiness and at the same time renew the cuticle and give a perfect complexion. Salon treatments are $2.50 each, or less by the course.

Mrs. Adair's complete Lecture Book will be mailed, free, upon request.

The Bust Line Must Show

The new silhouette shows decided curves and the contour of the bust must be in evidence instead of having the almost flat effect that has been fashionable for two seasons.

How to accomplish this natural curve and yet maintain the loose uncorseted effect is a problem easily solved by this

La Prima Bust Transformer

Thick pads and layers of ruffles are no longer necessary to give roundness to thin figures. This Bust Transformer of cable net lends the desired curve. The contour cups can be removed and the garment quickly laundered. Sent to you direct on receipt of price, $1.50.

WHISPERS TO THE GIRL WITH NOTHING A YEAR

COLORED cotton crêpe is quite the most practical waist material for a small wardrobe. If the shade of a suit can not be matched, white crêpe may be purchased and then dyed the desired color. The crêpe wears indefinitely and never creases under a coat, and its soft crinkly surface makes it particularly becoming. The edges may be finished with flat pipings of cloth or silk matching the material in color. A lining is usually necessary for such a waist, and it should be a slip of either China silk or thin satin.

One of the simplest, as well as smartest, ways to make a wide girdle is to arrange ten-inch ribbon so it will fasten on the left side and will leave a free edge almost an inch wide. Fasteners should be sewed on here, every two and a half inches, and when these are snapped in place, the girdle will arrange itself between the fastenings in the loose, plaited effect which is desirable.

A SUCCESSOR TO THE SILK SWEATER

A smart substitute for the silk sweater, which is so expensive, is the waistcoat. If it is made to match the skirt or to harmonize with it, a complete indoor winter costume, both more comfortable and more finished than just a skirt and blouse, is the result. The waistcoat should be open at the neck to fit the present style of open-neck blouse, and should be single-breasted and sleeveless; the armholes should be bound with a cording of the material. In length, this garment, which should be cut straight around the bottom, should come well down over the hips. A wide, loose belt of the material may button and sag low at the front. The smartness of a waistcoat such as this lies in its loose hang and casual fit. Corduroy is one of the nicest materials to use for this new house coat, as it may be called; in black corduroy it is very smart indeed. If one already has a separate cloth skirt to be worn with blouses, a corduroy or fancy velveteen that matches it would be excellent for the waistcoat. For lining, a China silk, a thin satin, or a figured crêpe de Chine may be used.

Discarded satin slippers can be made over into attractive bedroom slippers that have all the chic of expensive new ones. The light colored evening slippers may be dyed black and trimmed with a bunch of tiny pink roses from the millinery counter. For the girl who likes pink in her negligée costumes, roses are both suitable and practical. Tiny blue cornflowers may be substituted, however, if blue is the favorite color.

An excellent use for bits of real lace is to make them into chemise tops for evening wear. No shoulder pieces are required as just the straight trimming across the top is sufficient. Even if the pieces of lace are only long enough to go across the front, they can be used to advantage by insetting them as a panel in the front, and edging the back of the chemise with narrow lace. The band of lace and embroidery across the front makes an adequate and pretty lining for the thin layer of tulle or chiffon that constitutes all there is to the modern bodice.

PRACTICAL SILK UNDERWEAR

The moyen âge gown is often entirely detached from its lining, and this makes it possible to use one slip for wear under several gowns. A flesh colored satin slip, for instance, will serve under a tea-gown, a dancing frock, a chiffon afternoon gown, or a negligée. This sounds as if the lining might become worn and old before its time, but satin of a soft quality washes well. Because of this excellent quality white satin slip petticoats or underskirts can always be kept immaculate and fresh. The grade of satin required costs about $1.50 a yard and should be almost entirely free from dressing.

Crêpe de Chine is also an excellent material for an underskirt. White crêpe de Chine keeps fresh for a long time, wears almost indefinitely, and most acceptably takes the place of the white lingerie petticoat that begins to look bedraggled as soon as the starch is out of it. Pretty crêpe de Chine petticoats are available in the shops for $2 or $3, so that it scarcely pays to make them at home. The trimming is sometimes lace and is sometimes a plaiting of the material, but lace is more desirable as it launders better than plaiting.

FABRIC GLOVES

Fabric gloves have become exceedingly popular of late, and while for some time it was difficult to find them except with yellow on the reverse side, they may be had now of white material both inside and out. Also, instead of the buttoned strap that once formed the wrist fastening, they are now made in the regulation Biarritz model with gathers and an elastic. They sell for $1.25 a pair.

This Season Fashion Condescends to say that corsets should be made to follow the normal body lines. There will not be the exaggeration of the abnormally large waist, neither will there be an attempt to return to the waist constricting corset.

This makes it a season for Goodwin Models beyond all others, because sartorial absurdities and physiological impossibilities incompatible with Goodwin ideas are eliminated, permitting what is truly fashionable without the unreasonable.

The GOODWIN will afford that smooth fitted foundation required for the newer gowns, bringing out to a nicety the natural curves of the body. The lower top models may still be worn by women whose flesh does not roll over the corset, while the full fleshed figure should wear the model high enough to avoid bulging at points which would break the artistic body lines, there being a type of corset suited to the proportions of each individual figure.

Photographic reproductions of the new models including measurement blanks, also complete Catalogue G, etc., may be had upon request.

BEGINNING THE MODE

bottom of the underskirt in front, curves up at the sides, and leaves the whole length of the underskirt exposed in the back. A band of the silver-embroidered serge holds the fulness in place over the hips, and a fitted band of the silver embroidery outlines the neck just below the high tight collar of otter. Bands of the embroidery extend down the back and around the arms above the elbows. The under sleeves of serge have wide cuffs of otter.

A smart afternoon gown of beige velvet trimmed with marmot is shown in the middle of page 66. The skirt is gathered all the way around the waist, and lengthwise over each hip is a narrow band of the velvet trimmed with two large, metal-bound velvet buttons. The velvet is shirred across the front of the jacket and low on the hips. A single row of machine stitching through the velvet holds the shirrings in place and gives the effect of a narrow cord where the stitches sink into the pile of the velvet. The high turn-over collar and wide cuffs are of marmot, and the buttons on the coat are of beige velvet with a narrow metal rim. This model is called "Fidelio."

Bernard uses much blue serge and gabardine for the severely tailored costumes and the new moyen âge dresses. The moyen âge dresses are demure and simple, and are designed for slim, uncorseted figures. They are adjusted rather than fitted to the figure. One exceedingly pretty model is of navy blue gabardine and has a high tight collar and wide straight cuffs of snowy ermine. The effect of the white fur against the dark blue material is charming.

One serge model, of a blue so dark as to seem black in certain lights, has a modified and modernized polonaise. The line of the polonaise is suggested in more than one of the gowns displayed.

The ANGELUS Player-Piano Is Your Royal Road to Music

THE ANGELUS provides you with all the skill—the technique of the most accomplished pianist. More than this, it gives you a simple guide to the way each piece should be interpreted and a marvelous means by which you yourself can accomplish it.

THE WAY is through the Artistyle roll markings. The three characters "A" (Accelerando), "R" (Ritard), "T" (Tempo), spell art for you in the language of music as well as conversation. The correct tempo or phrasing of every note is indicated for you—while the change of the line of characters from left to right indicates the varying degrees of loud and soft.

THE MEANS. The marvelous Phrasing Lever (patented and exclusive to the ANGELUS) is the "means" by which you may follow the "way" indicated by the Artistyle. The slightest pressure on this marvelous device will affect all the variations of tempo, all the delicate nuances that go to make up artistic piano playing.

THE HUMAN TOUCH

The ANGELUS is the Only Player That Compares With Hand Playing because it is the only complete and perfect player. It is equipped with the Melodant that accents the melody, and the Sustaining Pedal Device, both self-acting—while the Diaphragm Pneumatics give exactly the same touch as the human finger.

I LIKED THAT DRESS SO MUCH

(You've Often Said It With a Sigh)
Let me reconstruct and create an entirely new gown from your favorite old frock which is so out of style now. I will give it fashion's latest chic touches which will give you a really new gown of distingue individuality. Your best friend would not recognize it.

A Well Fitting Lining Is All I Require

The so called rebuilding or remodeling of gowns is just what the name implies —lots of ripping apart and machine sewing. I give you only hand work by skilled workers. I also use your own materials. My prices are higher but deservedly so.

I supply smart mourning costumes of my own designs on short notice. Trousseau orders command my personal interest and attention.

"After studying and experimenting for seven years I have perfected a method of which does for the face what my Physical Culture has done for the figures and health of 60,000 women. Why should not the skin of your face and throat be as clear and unblemished as the skin of your body?—only because you have not treated your face intelligently."

Susanna Cocroft.

Tired eyes, wrinkles around them, pouches beneath them; crows feet; the droop at the corners of the mouth; the hard lines from the nostrils to the lips; drawn, colorless lips; sallow, discolored or freckled skins; all or any of which add ten years to your age, because they make you look ten years older, can all be overcome by systematically following the simple instructions clearly explained in the Grace-Mildred Culture Course of Physical Culture for the Face.

We also teach you how to make the Hair glossy and abundant; to care for the Hands, Feet, Eyes, Eyebrows, Ears, Mouth, Neck, Chin, etc.

You Are As Old As You Look

If you look older than you should, it is because you are not doing what you should to help nature. The result you want is certain, no experimenting (Miss Cocroft has experimented on this work for seven years). Innumerable women have attained the end you want by carefully following instructions.

In six to ten minutes a day of Physical Culture Exercises for the face, you can do more at home than massage will accomplish in an hour a day in a beauty parlor.

Those who know Miss Cocroft's national—yes, international—reputation as a restorer of health and youth, will be as pleased to hear of this new feature in her work as they will be certain that it will produce precisely the results she claims for it.

The direction of this work will be in the hands of her nieces, Miss Grace L. Ballack and Miss Mildred A. Albee, whose association with Miss Cocroft for many years has adequately qualified them to assume the direction of this department of Miss Cocroft's culture training. For further particulars and names of those who have taken this course and gotten the results desired, write us NOW. The results are marvelous.

"A Man Would Die in the First Alcove"

THERE are 850,000 volumes in the Imperial Library at Paris," said Emerson. "If a man were to read industriously from dawn to dark for sixty years he would die in the first alcove." And he would not die a well-read man. But if a man could know what few great books are enduringly worth while and could read those few — histories, biographies, dramas, works of travel, fiction, poetry, philosophy, and religion — he would become well read, even though he could devote to them but a few pleasant moments a day.

Expert Advice on Your Reading —FREE.

For years Dr. Charles W. Elliot, President Emeritus of Harvard, has maintained that the books really essential to the Twentieth Century idea of a cultivated man could be contained in a Five-Foot Shelf, and from his sixty years of reading, study, and teaching—forty of which were spent at the head of one of the world's greatest universities—he has put aside those few books that he considers most worth while—the few that best picture the progress of the human race from the earliest times down to the present day, through the writings of those who have made our civilization what it is.

$50,000 was spent in compiling and indexing the set, arranging foot notes and Reading Guide, and the result was finally presented at a cost of $150,000 as

The Famous Five-Foot Shelf of Books

418 Masterpieces at a few cents apiece

Any man who cares to read efficiently, instead of wastefully, should know what few books Dr. Elliot selected, and why. He should know why 100,000 successful men are finding in the Five-Foot Shelf just the mental stimulus they need.

Everything you need to know about The Famous Five-Foot Shelf of Books is in a free booklet.

There is a copy for you—no obligation; merely clip the coupon.

"Just Nature's Way"

My Beauty Exercises

Will make you look Younger and more Beautiful than all the external treatments you might use for a lifetime. No massage, electricity, vibration, astringents, plasters, straps, filling or surgery—Just Nature's Way.

Results come soon and are permanent. My System makes muddy, sallow skins clear, and the complexion as fresh as in girlhood; firms the flesh, and never fails to lift drooping and sagging facial muscles, thereby obliterating resultant wrinkles. The too thin face and neck are rounded out and hollows filled in. No one too old or too young to benefit.

My System makes double chins disappear quickly and it leaves the flesh firm after the superfluous fat is worked away.

My beauty exercises are supplemented by special work to make the figure more shapely and youthful; instructions to beautify the hair, eyebrows and eyelashes, hands, nails and feet.

No matter how tired, five minutes of my Facial Exercise will freshen complexion and give it a most exquisite coloring.

A STITCH AT THIS TIME MEANS ECONOMY!

Now is the time to think of your fall and winter wardrobe. Especially so since war has practically suspended dealings with foreign houses and there are many women left without gowns and frocks.

Before making hasty purchases, consider first the economy of having a few of your last year's suits and gowns remodeled.

Years of experience has taught me how to make old frocks look like new. I remodel gowns, suits and dresses, using your own materials if desired.

THIS AUTUMN SHOP THROUGH VOGUE

NOW more than ever before, New York is the market-place of the whole world. This season, with all its complexities, offers extraordinary advantages to the woman who does her purchasing in the metropolis.

Even if you are not in New York, you can shop through Vogue as conveniently as though you were here in person.

The Vogue Shopping Service is ready to fill any order you may send it. There is no charge for our services. Use this number of Vogue as a reference book, and you will not be at a loss for shopping suggestions. Then, when you have found what you want, let Vogue get it for you.

Vogue will buy for you, and have delivered, any article mentioned in any issue from the first page to the last. But, when ordering articles advertised in Vogue, it will save time to write directly to the shop. Articles which Vogue mentions editorially will be bought for you without any extra charge, except transportation; all you need do is to send a cheque for the required amount and tell Vogue how you wish your purchases delivered.

READ THESE SUGGESTIONS

1. Please write very plainly, especially name and address. When answer is required, enclose stamped envelope.
2. When ordering any article mentioned in Vogue, give the date of issue and number of the page.
3. Enclose cheque or money order, payable to the Vogue Company, to cover the cost of the articles desired. If price is unknown, send the approximate amount. Should a balance remain after purchase, it will be refunded promptly.
4. If your remittance is insufficient, you will be notified; articles cannot be forwarded until the full amount has been received.
5. Unless otherwise requested, all purchases will be sent express collect. When approximate amount is enclosed for the purpose, charges will be prepaid. Orders cannot be sent C. O. D. When ordering small articles, include sufficient postage so that they may be mailed.
6. Only when special arrangements are made in advance will articles be sent with the privilege of returning them. When you return any such article, send it to the Vogue Shopping Service and not to the shop. Your remittance will be refunded when the article is received, but express charges both ways will be at your expense.
7. The Vogue Shopping Service will not open charge accounts, nor undertake to charge purchases to your individual account with the shop from which they are bought.
8. When ordering garments of any kind, be sure to state sizes and to give the fullest possible instructions as to material, style, color, etc.
9. Whenever possible, please name a second choice in case the article you desire is no longer in stock. Also please let us know if you can wait for a fortnight or three weeks in case what you order is not in stock or has to be specially made for you.
10. Since every moment of available time is now spent in filling orders, Vogue cannot undertake to send samples.

The SMART SET

A Magazine of Cleverness

PREPARED to stimulate all such persons as are just a bit tired of the usual American periodical with its pictures of "uplifters" and actresses, with its New-England-farm sentimentality, with its analysis of the value of the Zeppelins in warfare, with its circulation-pleading serials, with its hypocritical morals and even more hypocritical smut, with its drawings of heroes ten feet tall and blue-eyed bare-footed heroines lost in the Adirondacks, with its big-named little idea'd writers, with its detective stories in which the seemingly innocent person is discovered in the last line to have been the murderer of the man whose body was found by the maid in the library. In short, a magazine without any other "policy" in the world than to give its readers a moderately intelligent and awfully good time.

A Youthful Figure

You can retain all the youth and grace of your figure—or you can regain the normal beauty of line and suppleness that speak of perfect health by the use of

This is an open-mesh, elastic garment constructed on a new principle. It permits unrestricted freedom of motion and at the same time reduces flesh by an evenly distributed, gentle pressure. It secures an immediate reduction of from two to four inches over abdomen, hips, back and limbs and is for the slender as well as the fat.

Any figure is molded to perfect shape as soon as the garment is put on.

Not a "Slip-over"—Not a "Sweat-bath"

The Magic Figure Mold can be worn in comfort throughout the day either without the corset or under it. It does not cause undue perspiration or injurious constriction.

You Can Still Travel 'Round the World

Although the roar of artillery, the clatter of horses' hoofs, and the march of armed men may close the book of foreign travel for a season, there is still one way in which you can travel around the world in ease and comfort, and not miss any of its scenes. The famous battlefields and cities of Europe, the historic valleys and rivers and mountains, the daily life of the people—all are revealed to you through pleasing text and informing picture, without the inconvenience of seized passports or confiscated luggage. And for those who have always preached "see America first," the pleasure is no less keen. Mighty waterfalls, far-reaching plain, snow-clad mountains—all the grandeur of our own land is reflected in the brilliant pages of

The Magazine That

TRAVEL

Takes You There

During the coming months TRAVEL is going to be all the more necessary and valuable. It will take away the sting of enforced staying at home, and throw a wonderfully clear light on present day events. Its extra large page gives a splendid opportunity for its exclusive photographs and other features. War photographs of unusual quality are being obtained, although TRAVEL will not be essentially a war magazine. It is always for the man of peace who loves to see every land in its own natural setting. Its descriptions of foreign places are all the more important, however, now that these places are turning points in history. The man at home in his easy-chair, through TRAVEL, can always be a citizen of the world.

TAKE A TRIAL TRIP

For a dollar bill—less than the price of a cab across town—you can get passage on the good ship TRAVEL for six months. Just fill out the blank below, pin a dollar bill to it, and send it in—and a pleasant journey of half a year will be yours!

Does Your Figure Please You?

Your dressmaker can never make a gown look well on you unless you have a good figure and unless you carry it well

I want to make you realize that your figure and health are almost entirely in your own hands, and that by following my simple, hygienic directions in the privacy of your own room that your whole being vibrates health. I have helped 65,000 of the most refined, intellectual women of America to regain health and good figures; and have taught them how to keep well. Why not you? You are busy, but you can devote a few minutes a day, in the privacy of your own room, to following scientific, hygienic principles of health prescribed to your particular needs.

You Can Be So Well

I have reduced the weight of over 32,000 women and increased the weight of as many more. In my work for reduction or building flesh, I strengthen every vital function so that you are full of life and energy.

My work has grown in favor because results are quick, natural and permanent, and because they are scientific and appeal to common sense. Fully one-third of my pupils are sent to me by those who have worked with me.

I wish you could stand with me at my window for a few minutes and, as the women pass, realize with me how many need better figures, better health. They could have them too, with just a little daily effort which is easy—not as hard as what they are enduring.

The best physicians are my friends—their wives and daughters are my pupils—the medical magazines advertise my work. Someone in your town knows me. Ask your friends about my work. I am at my desk daily from 8 to 5.

No Drugs—No Medicines

I study each woman's case just as a physician studies it, the only difference being that instead of medicine I strengthen and put in place weakened organs by exercises for nerves and muscles controlling them, bringing a good circulation of warm blood to them, which I purify by teaching correct breathing. I relieve such ailments as

Indigestion Sleeplessness Catarrh Suffering in
Anemia Torpid Liver Weakness Rheumatism

I have published a free booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly and giving other information of vital interest to women. Write for it and I will also tell you about my work. If you are perfectly well and your figure is just what you wish, you may be able to help a dear friend—at least you will help me by your interest in this great movement for greater culture, refinement and beauty in woman. Sit down and write me NOW. Don't wait—you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience and I should like to tell you about it.

PACKARD

BEAUTY is a human necessity. Taste is the faculty of discerning it.

Every time we make a selection for ourselves, our home or our friends, we are revealing our true selves, and putting ourselves on record as possessing taste or lacking it.

As we read the story of the ages we are reminded that certain qualities which men have woven, and carved, and infused into their works have lived because they have satisfied human demands; and while it is true that some will manufacture the things the many require, it is also true that the many will demand better things.

Prestige of the producer increases in direct ratio as raw material is advanced from the level of mere utility to the higher one that seeks also to beautify and convey esthetic satisfaction.
